

Contributors

Shir Alon is assistant professor of Middle Eastern studies at the University of Minnesota. She has published scholarly articles in Arab Studies Journal, Comparative Literature, Jewish Social Studies, and boundary 2. Her book manuscript explores the challenges of writing the present in modern Arabic and Hebrew literatures.

Stuart Burrows is associate professor of English at Brown University. He is the author of A Familiar Strangeness: American Fiction and the Language of Photography as well as numerous essays. Burrows is currently completing a study of temporality in Henry James titled The Invention of the Present.

Nissim Calderon is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Hebrew Literature at Ben-Gurion University, Be'er Sheva, Israel. He has published extensively on contemporary Hebrew literature, poetry, and music, and the relationship between them.

Alejandra Campoy Fernández is a PhD candidate in comparative literature at UCLA. Her dissertation focuses on the aesthetics of illness in nineteenth- and twentieth-century Latin American literature. Her research interests include modernism, crime fiction, and health humanities.

Yahya Elsaghe is professor of modern German literature at the University of Bern, Switzerland. His publications include monographs on Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, Friedrich Hölderlin, Thomas Mann, and Max Frisch. His book on film adaptations of Thomas Mann's works, Thomas Mann auf Leinwand und Bildschirm (Thomas Mann on the Big and Small Screen), was published in German in 2019.

Emran Feroz is a journalist and writer based in Germany. His writings have appeared in Foreign Policy, The Intercept, TRT (Turkish Radio and TV), Middle East Eye, among others. His book, Tod per Knopfdruck (2017) is one of the first in-depth studies of US drone warfare. He can be reached at emran_feroz@hotmail.com.

Rodrigo Fresán is an Argentinean fiction writer and journalist based in Barcelona. He has published numerous essays and books that have been translated into many languages. His novel The Invented Part was published in English in 2017.

Timothy J. Haehn received a PhD in comparative literature from UCLA. He works on twentieth-century American and Russian literature and translation studies.

He Ning is currently associate professor of German literature at Beijing Language and Culture University. She received her doctorate in German language and literature from Peking University. Her current research interests include women in German literature, the interactions between literary text and film, and the relationship between literature and photography.

Claire Xue Li is currently a PhD student in comparative literature at the University of Southern California. Her research interests include global modernism, psychoanalytic narratology, the novel, and Chinese literature.

Maria Malikova holds PhDs in comparative literature from Tampere University (Finland) and in Russian literature from the Institute of Russian Literature (Pushkin House) of the Russian Academy of Sciences in St. Petersburg. She is currently a researcher at the Institute of Russian Literature.

Isa Murdock-Hinrichs is a professor of practice in the English Department at Tulane University. She has published articles on Rainer Werner Fassbinder, Michael Haneke, G. W. Sebald, and the silent works of Fritz Lang and André Dupont. She is currently working on a monograph on early cinematic expressions and reconfigurations of the foreign.

Sina Rahmani earned his PhD from UCLA's Department of Comparative Literature with a dissertation on the question of orphanhood in the nineteenth-century British novel. He was a SSHRC postdoctoral fellow in the Department of English and Film Studies at the University of Alberta. His work has been published in PMLA, Iranian Studies, Radical History Review, and Public Books. He is the creator of the East Is a Podcast (Eastpodcast.com).

Uwe Schütte is a reader in German at Aston University, Birmingham, UK. He earned his PhD in 1997 from the University of East Anglia, where he was supervised by W. G. Sebald. He is the author and editor of more than twenty books on German-language literature and popular music, including seven volumes on Sebald.