Contributors

WOODROW BORAH is Abraham D. Shepard Professor of History, Emeritus, at the University of California, Berkeley. He retired in 1980. His most widely known work, in collaboration with the late Professor Sherburne F. Cook of the Department of Physiology on the same campus, estimates the size of aboriginal populations at the time of the coming of the Europeans to the Caribbean and Mexico, as well as analyzing other aspects of population history. Other themes of Borah’s writing include economic history, urban studies, Indian policy, and Spanish colonial institutions in Mexico and the New World. Most recently (1983), he has published a study of the General Indian Court of New Spain.

ROBERT MCCAA, Associate Professor of History at the University of Minnesota, received the Ph.D. from the University of California at Los Angeles in 1978. With the completion of his family reconstitution study of a Chilean parish, recently published as Marriage and Fertility in Chile: Demographic Turning Points in the Feterca Valley, 1840–1976, his research interests have shifted to Mexico and the transformation of social structures and sentiments from colonial times to the present. Toward this end, he has formed a micro-maquiladora in Parral, mining the municipal archives to reconstruct life histories of thousands of people who appear in the parish, civil, and administrative records during the past three and a half centuries.

LORENA M. PARLEE is currently a Visiting Lecturer at the University of California, Irvine. She received her Ph.D. in 1981 from the University of California, San Diego. Her major research focuses on the close interrelationship between northern Mexico and southwestern United States in the period 1880–1940. Expanding on her dissertation on United States railroads in northern Mexico, she is examining their impact on political, cultural, and social developments in northern Mexico and on the Mexican Revolution. She is currently finishing a book on the Mexican immigrant community in Los Angeles during the 1920s and 1930s. She was Associate Producer, Writer, and Researcher for the award-winning documentary, Ballad of An Unsung Hero, which portrays the experiences of a member of this community, and she is currently writing and producing, From the Other Side, a documentary on women in the Mexican Revolution.

RICARDO A. SILVA SEITENFUS is Associate Professor of Political Science at the Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul (Porto Alegre, Brazil) and Director of the Centro Brasileiro de Documentação e Estudos da Bacia do Prata (CEDEP). He obtained his Ph.D. at the Graduate Institute of International Studies (Geneva, Switzerland) with the thesis “Le Brésil de Getúlio Vargas et la formation des blocs, 1930–1942. Le processus de l’engagement brésilien dans la seconde guerre mondiale.” At present, he is carrying out research on the relations of Italian Fascism with the countries of the Bacia do Prata and on Brazil’s foreign policy, particularly in the field of security and international relations within the United Nations.