Contributors

CHARLES D. AMERINGER is Professor of Latin American History at the Pennsylvania State University. He received his Ph.D. from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University, in 1958. A specialist in the recent history of the Spanish-speaking Caribbean, his publications include The Democratic Left in Exile: The Antidictatorial Struggle in the Caribbean, 1945–1959 (1974), Don Pepe: A Political Biography of José Figueres of Costa Rica (1979), and Democracy in Costa Rica (1982). He is currently at work on a study of the Cuban Auténtico party in power, 1944–52.

RICHARD L. GARNER, Associate Professor of History at Penn State University, received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1970. His interest in Mexican history began with a seminar paper written during his graduate work. Since then he has continued to gather price data and other economic information and to consider their implications in the delineation of the overall course of the eighteenth-century Mexican economy. He is currently at work on a manuscript about Mexico's eighteenth-century economy, with special emphasis on long-term trends.

ERICK D. LANGER, Assistant Professor of History at Carnegie-Mellon University, received his Ph.D. from Stanford University in 1984. His specialization is rural society in republican Bolivia. He has just finished an article on Andean banditry in the early twentieth century, to be published in a book on Latin American banditry edited by Richard W. Flatta. Current research interests include the demographic reconstruction of nineteenth-century Indian highland communities and the effects of the Franciscan missions on tribal societies along the margins of the Gran Chaco.

LOUIS A. PÉREZ, JR., Professor of History at the University of South Florida, received his Ph.D. from the University of New Mexico in 1970. His research interests center on late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century Cuba. He is soon to complete a book on Cuba under the Platt Amendment.

STEVEN TOPIK received his Ph.D. from the University of Texas, Austin, in 1978, and is Assistant Professor of History at the University of California, Irvine. His research interests have focused on political-economic analyses of the Brazilian state in the 1850–1930 period. Of particular interest have been the state's role in banking, the coffee trade, railroads, and industry. A book including essays on these areas is forthcoming from the University of Texas Press.

Topik is currently engaged in a comparative study of the state's role in Mexico and Brazil, during the height of the export economies, 1888–1910.