

MIND TO MIND

Creative writing that explores the abstract side of our profession and our lives

Stephen T. Harvey, M.D., Editor

Intensive Care Psychosis

Brenda Yates

Egged on by the televisions across the hall, walls taunt, threaten to close in. Hoping they won't hear, you whisper. That Mardi Gras parade in your room at 2 a.m. should be reported;
sleep black behind your eyes has been stolen, replaced with electric blue. Masks—and other evidence—are in the closet marked supplies.

Atmosphere presses against my ears as if we were diving too deep. Pulse thunders; I grab the arm of a passing nurse, sputter clotted panic. She spins in a slippery grace, clicks: “temporary,
not uncommon in ICU,” and whirrs away.

Your fitful hand trembles and leaps in mine.
Hallucinations bubble like nitrogen in blood,
escape your skin into the water we breathe.

This poem is one of the finalists of ANESTHESIOLOGY's 2019 annual creative writing competition, The Letheon. brenda@yates.bz.

Accepted for publication January 31, 2020. Published online first on March 2, 2020.

Permission to reprint granted to the American Society of Anesthesiologists, Inc. by copyright author/owner. Anesthesiology 2020; 133:1306. DOI: 10.1097/ALN.0000000000003218