An asymptomatic 30-year-old male underwent magnetic resonance angiography (MRA). This identified an aberrant left brachiocephalic vein (Fig. 1), which accounts for <1% of all congenital cardiovascular abnormalities. To our knowledge, such venous topography has not been previously described in a structurally normal heart.