

EDITORS' ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

There are many people—too many to mention here—to whom we are thankful for helping us bring If Schools Didn't Exist into contact with a wider audience. Much like Christie's model of the school-society developing as an organism to attain a life of its own, the process of translating and editing has generated discussions and new acquaintances that have all contributed to convince us of the relevance as well as importance of sharing the work at this moment in time. We are grateful to the people who were involved, each in their own way, either at some point or throughout the journey. They include our editor at the MIT Press, Susan Buckley, whose skillful facilitation and helpful comments have been invaluable throughout the process; Judith Suissa for ongoing dialogues and reflections, and elegantly situating and bringing to life the book's continued significance; Peter Plant for pointing us toward the book in early spring 2014; Hedda Giertsen and Pål Frogner for helping us get closer to the context of Christie's life and work; Diane Oatley for thoughtful feedback and revisions of the manuscript; Louise Cone and Tora Frogner for precious clarifications and comments throughout the work of translation and editing; Steen Nepper Larsen for feedback and ongoing conversations on the book's arguments within a contemporary context; Norwegian Literature Abroad for supporting the translation; and finally, Olivia and Tora for supporting both our hearts and minds while going at it.
