

.....
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS
.....

This book has been a long time in the making and has, along the way, gathered a number of debts. I would like, first of all, to thank my informants in New Delhi and the San Francisco Bay Area for their generosity and patience: so many of them met with me repeatedly for over a decade and shared their insights, experiences, anxieties, and aspirations. Expressing one's sense of unsettlement is never an easy or comfortable experience and, in doing so, my informants, some of whom became friends over the years, also shared their sense of vulnerability. I have learned much from them. They provided me with many examples of how the affects that suffuse longings, dreams, anxieties, and fears are generative of agency and of subjectivity. Like others before them, these informants reminded me of the ways in which coping with the temporalities of everyday life, of learning to make do, of yearning and despairing, of struggling to change one's circumstances, of losing and then regaining hope all represent modes of making sense of one's life that are also modes of theorizing one's place in the world. This, then, has become an objective of all my ethnographic work: to bring, with deep humility, my informants' modes of theorizing into conversation with conceptual frameworks that I have developed as a feminist anthropologist, a scholar of media and public cultures, and a student of the transnational and the global.

I must also thank the institutions that provided support for the research and writing of this book. My very first forays into researching this book were enabled by a seed grant from the South Asia Initiative at Stanford University. The conceptualization and initial writing of this book were supported by a fellowship at the Radcliffe Institute of Advanced Study at Harvard University. My colleagues at the Radcliffe, chiefly, Rita Brock, Cynthia Enloe, Dhooleka Raj, Francesca Sawaya and Vicki Schulz patiently read and listened to iterations of papers that were later to become chapters. At Harvard, Michael and Nea Herzfeld, Charles Hirschkind, Engseng Ho, Saba Mahmood, and Mary Steedly were a wonderful community of friends and interlocutors: without their company I would never have felt at home at Harvard or in Cambridge. While in residence at the Stanford Humanities Center, stimulating feedback from my colleagues, chiefly, Keith Baker, John Bender, Johannes Fabian, Wendy Larson, and Rob Polhemus enabled me to rethink and revise the architecture of this book. An exemplary institution, the Stanford Humanities Center provides those privileged to be fellows with outstanding resources and, most importantly fiercely protects the time of faculty who, in their home institutions, are overextended with teaching and advising. Final revisions to this manuscript were carried out in the summer of 2013 while in residence at the Asia Research Institute at the National University of Singapore (NUS): I am grateful to Prasenjit (Bhaity) Duara and other colleagues at NUS, chiefly, Ann Brooks, Beng Huat Chua, Annu Jalais, Vineeta Sinha, Malini Sur, Shawna Tang, and Sharon Quah for making my stay in Singapore so productive and enjoyable.

I am immensely appreciative of my colleagues at the Center for the Study of Race and Ethnicity at Stanford University for providing me, and many other minority faculty and students, with an oasis and a safe space for sharing work and ideas. Larry Bobo, Gordon Chang, Hazel Markus, David Palumbo-Liu, Claude Steele, and Dorothy Steele provided moral support at a very difficult time and proved, once again, that intellectual work and political solidarity must always go hand-in-hand. Colleagues in my former department at Stanford, chiefly, Sylvia Yanagisako, Akhil Gupta, Lochlann (Sarah) Jain, Barb Voss, and Matthew Kohrman were terrific interlocutors; the staff in the department, chiefly, Ellen Christensen and Shelly Coughlan took care, with great competence and grace, of the “infrastructure” that enabled my research. My students at Stanford quickly became my peers and colleagues: to this day, my writing and research are shaped by their voices and insights. These include (in alphabetical order) Tania Ahmed, Lalaie Ameeriar, Jocelyn Chua, Cari Costanzo, Rozita Dimova, Rachael Joo, Jisha Menon, Karen Morris, Marcia Ochoa, Sima Shakhshari, Mukta Sharangpani, Aradhana Sharma, Celine Parrenas Shimizu, and Miriam Ticktin—all of who continue to inspire me with the integrity and creativity they bring to their work and to their lives. Rozita Dimova and Ulka Anjaria provided diligent research assistance: their insights have shaped chapters 5 and 6. My undergraduate students at Stanford often took my breath away with their dynamism, commitment to combining a life of ideas with political activism, and sheer brilliance. I recall with particular affection and respect Veena Dubal, Amisha Patel, Aly Remtulla, Nisha Varia, all of whom have now become an invaluable part of my life. Mamta Ahluwalia, Ritu Bhatnagar, and Veena Dubal provided indispensable research assistance: without them I could never have written this book. Special thanks to Rachael Joo and Marcia Ochoa for their comments on these chapters.

At UCLA, I am grateful to my department chairs, Chris Littleton, Beth Marchant, and Jenny Sharpe of the Department of Gender Studies and Cindy Fan, Lane Hirabayashi, and Jinqi Ling of the Department of Asian American Studies for their support. I am particularly thankful to the staff in both my departments, Jenna Miller-von Ah, Samantha Hogan, Richard Medrano, Van Nguyen, Jessie Singh, Natalia Yamashiro-Chogyoji and Anne Bautista for their hard work and patience. My colleagues at UCLA have been a wonderful source of intellectual stimulation and camaraderie: these include (in alphabetical order) Victor Bascara, Lucy Burns, John Caldwell, Keith Camacho, Jessica Cattelino, King-kok Cheung, Michelle Erai, Lieba Faier, Cindy Fan, Aisha Finch, Mishuana Goeman, Sondra Hale, Sarah Haley, Grace Hong, Marjorie Kagawa-Singer, Rachel Lee, Jinqi Ling, Beth Marchant, Saloni Mathur, Valerie Matsumoto, Kathleen McHugh, Aamir Mufti, Don Nakanishi, Thu-huong Nguyen-vo, Kate Norberg, Chon Noriega, Paul Ong, Sherry Ortner, Kyeyoung Park, Sanjay Subrahmanyam, Renee Tajima-Pena, Tim Taylor, Sharon Traweek, David Yoo, and Min Zhou. Members of my writing group, Lieba Faier, Hannah Landecker, Abby Saguy, and Juliet Williams were generous and rigorous readers of drafts of many of the chapters of this book and I am deeply grateful to them. Ali Behdad and Juliet Williams made me and my family welcome when I first moved to Los Angeles. I have been delighted to have students who have provided me with intellectual companionship and stimulation. These include Amanda Apgar, Diya Bose, Sudeep Chowdhury, Chloe Coventry, Brian Hu, Jessica Martinez, Naveen Minai, Esha Momeni, Trung Nguyen, Lai Wa Wu, Stephanie Santos, Preeti Sharma, Mihiri Tillakaratne, Saundarya Thapa, Iris Yellum, and Ger Xiong. I am particularly grateful to Amanda Apgar, Priya Patel, Preeti Sharma, Darci Sprengel, and Saundarya Thapa for their assistance as I revised this book.

Beyond Stanford University and UCLA, Lila Abu-Lughod, Anne Allison, Anjali Arondekar, Steve Caton, Carla Freeman, Faye Ginsburg, Michael Herzfeld, Engsang Ho, Arthur Kleinman, Fred Myers, Arvind Rajagopal, Parama Roy, Louisa Schein, and Mary Steedly have been generous colleagues: I have learned a great deal from their work and their feedback has shaped much of the analysis that has gone into this book. In reading this book, my teachers from graduate school, E. Valentine (Val) Daniel, Lorna Rhodes, and Ann Anagnost will find that their mentorship still shapes my scholarship so many years into my career.

I cannot thank enough my editor at Duke University Press, Ken Wisoker, for his patience with this project. If it weren't for his confidence in me and this project, this book would perhaps never have seen the light of day. Willa Armstrong, Jade Brooks, Amy Buchanan, and Sara Leone at Duke University Press have been a pleasure to work with. I am very grateful to Anitra Grisales for editing earlier drafts of the chapters of this book. I thank the anonymous reviewers of this book for their rigorous feedback.

In addition to the professional and institutional support that I have received, I have been sustained by a close community of friends-turned-kin. In India we have a wonderful term, "family friends," that encapsulates how friends become family when bonds of affection strengthen over the years and, very often, across distances. Veena Dubal has become my older daughter and is one of the most important members of my family: her sparkling intelligence, infinite capacity to love, unflinching commitment to an ethical life, and generosity always fills me with awe. I have been privileged to acquire a wonderful network of family friends in the San Francisco Bay Area which, despite my move to Los Angeles, provides companionship, good humor, and affection. These include Lawrence Cohen, George Collier and Jane Collier, Cari Costanzo, Eleni Kapur, and Kai Kapur, Julia Jaroch and Ethiraj Venkatapathy, Arun and Poornima Kumar, Sylvia Yanagisako and John Sullivan, David Palumbo-Liu and Sylvie Palumbo-Liu. Arun and Poornima, in particular, have always opened up their home to me and I will always love them for that and many other kindnesses. Dan Neuman, Sherry Ortner, and Tim Taylor were the magnets that drew my family and me to UCLA and, thanks to them and to Saloni Mathur, Aamir Mufti, and Jalal Mufti, Kathleen McHugh and Chon Noriega, and Arundhati Neuman, Los Angeles is now my home. Ken Wissoker, Cathy Davidson, Inderpal Grewal, David Nugent, and K. (Shivi) Sivaramakrishnan have been generous with their affection and friendship. Ulf Hannerz and Helena Wulff in Stockholm; Rachel Dwyer and Michael Dwyer in London; Kirin Narayan and Ken George in Canberra; Tara Mohanan and K. P. Mohanan in Singapore and now in Pune; Prasenjit Duara, Juliet Duara, Arpana Vidyarthi and Rajiv Ramanathan in Singapore; Minal Hajratwala, Arjun Kalyanpur and Sunita Maheshwari, Lata Mani, Devesh and Bhavani Nayel, Saritha Rai, Ayaana Bhojwani, and Namas Bhojwani, Sajai Singh and Sapna Taneja in Bangalore; Dhananjay Date in Pune; Vandana Chak, Razia Ismail, and Ritu Walia in New Delhi are my diasporic family friends who make me feel at home every time I am with them.

In October 2008, I met with an automobile accident and incurred a head injury that took away my ability to read for close to a year. I was terrified and, occasionally, filled with despair. Throughout this time, Akhil Gupta took over the challenging task of managing our household and our move to Bangalore. It was his profound compassion, patience, and love that, eventually, enabled my recovery. I owe him more than words can express. Ken Wissoker extended unwavering support, and Lata Mani was a living example of courage and fortitude. Louisa Schein was generous with her sympathy and patience during this challenging time and, at UCLA, Chris Littleton, Lane Hirabayashi, and Alessandro Duranti extended support that went beyond the call of duty.

My family has been a source of tremendous love and support: they have been the “steel frame” of my life and have always stood by me. Silvia Flores, Lucy Mankekar, Aruna and Harsh Bhargava, Anita and Rahul Aggarwal, Gauri and Amit Gangolli, Akash and Elizabeth Bhargava, Aaron Mankekar, Nina Mankekar Pandya and Tushar Pandya, and Shefali Aggarwal Patel have provided me with much companionship and good humor. My life has been enriched by loved ones who are no longer with me: my father, D. R. Mankekar, my father-in-law Jwala Gupta, and my brother Ajit Mankekar. Not a day goes by when I do not miss them. My mother Kamla Mankekar always inspires me with the dignity, integrity, and courage with which she lives her life: quite simply, I would not be the feminist, parent, and scholar I am if it were not for her. My mother-in-law, Meena Gupta, has taught me so much about resilience, grace, and the capacity to forgive: she has been my “guru” in many ways.

This book is shaped by the presence of two of the most important people in my world. My daughter Deeya Shivani Gupta has given me unending joy: her capacity for happiness, her sense of empathy and compassion, her creativity, and her never-say-die attitude have filled my life with magic. My partner in all things, Akhil Gupta, has been unfailingly generous: his ability to find humor in every situation, his strong sense of ethics, and his innate sense of dignity have all been a source of tremendous strength for me. Akhil is my moral compass, my collaborator, my best friend, and the love of my life: I dedicate this book to him as a token of my gratitude for everything that he is to me and does for me.

A portion of chapter 1 first appeared in “Reflections on Diasporic Identities: A Prolegomenon to an Analysis of Political Bifocality,” in Diaspora: A Journal of Transnational Studies 3, no. 3 (Winter 1994): 349–71. Earlier versions of chapters 2, 3, 4, and 6 in a different form appeared respectively in the following: “Brides Who Travel: Gender, Transnationalism, and Nationalism in Hindi Film,” in Positions 7, no. 3 (1999b): 731–62; “India Shopping’: Indian Grocery Stores and Transnational Configurations of Belonging,” in Ethnos: Journal of Anthropology 67, no. 1 (2002): 75-97; “Dangerous Desires: Television and Erotics in Late-Twentieth Century India,” in Journal of Asian Studies 63, no. 2 (2004): 403-31; and “Becoming Entrepreneurial Subjects: Neoliberalism and Media” in The State in India after Liberalization: Interdisciplinary Perspectives, edited by Akhil Gupta and K. Sivaramakrishnan, 213-22. New York: Routledge, 2011.