

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I owe a great deal to many people in Roviana, Honiara, and elsewhere in the Solomon Islands, in particular Faletau Leve. I hope this book will serve as a monument to his memory. Other Roviana people include Ronald Talsassa and family, Chris Mamupio, Donald Maepio and family, Sae Oka, Josephine Wheatley and family, Reverend Robertson Bato, Annie Homelo, David Kera and family, Simon Sasae, Olive Talasassa, Lawrence Foana'ota, the Saunders and Poras families, Tapa, and Stanley (and everyone I played football with). Thanks to all those I worked with constructing the new school building in Dundee, the staff and students at the Sokogaso Learning Centre, and all those Roviana people who shared their knowledge and photographs with me in such a generous way. I am very grateful to the elders of the Dundee Council for their permission to work there. Thank you and leana hola.

In Australia and New Zealand I am very grateful to Peter Shepard and his family, Christine Dureau, Takuya Nagaoka, Frida Wheatley and family, and Dom and Michelle.

In the United Kingdom, I owe a great deal to Chris Pinney, who has been helpful in more ways than I can count and has been a constant friend. Roslyn Poignant also provided a huge amount of support and productive critical input, as well as serving as the best possible source of inspiration. I have also benefited greatly from discussions with the following people: Elizabeth Edwards, Susanne Kuechler, Deborah Waite, Phil Burnham, Nicholas Saunders, Christopher Tilley, Daniel Miller, Lucy Norris, “Buck” Scheifelin, Haidy Geismar, Graeme Wear, Nicholas Thomas, Edvard Hviding, and Jari Kupiainen. The work of Edvard Hviding was a particular source of inspiration for my research, especially for the way in which he always privileges the voices of Solomon Islanders. His fieldwork always served as an excellent model. I have been lucky enough to have been involved in the intellectual project on anthropology and photography initiated by Roslyn Poignant, Christopher Pinney and Elizabeth Edwards in the 1980s, and my own work owes an inestimable debt to their examples. I have also learned a lot through presenting some of the ideas in this book in the form of papers at Goldsmiths, University College London, University of Manchester, and the AAA annual conference.

The members of the New Georgia Archaeological Survey, particularly Peter Sheppard, Shankar Aswani, Takuya Nagaoka, and Tim Thomas warmly welcomed me in Roviana in 1998 and have continued to provide strong collegiate support for which I am extremely grateful.

Staff at the following institutions provided a great deal of support: Royal Anthropological Institute, London (especially Sarah Walpole); Royal Geographical Society, London; Ethnography Department and Library at the British Museum; Cambridge Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology; Pitt Rivers Museum, Oxford; Mitchell Library, Sydney; Australian Museum, Sydney; Melbourne Museum, Melbourne; Powerhouse Museum, Sydney; Methodist Archives, Auckland (particularly Jill Weeks); National Museum, Honiara; Auckland Museum; Rautenstrauch Joest Museum, Cologne; National Library, Canberra.

I owe a huge debt to Nicholas Thomas for all his insightful and helpful comments — this book owes much to his intellectual inspiration and support. The staff at Duke University Press have provided a huge amount of support in seeing this book into production. In particular Ken Wissocker has been extremely patient and has always been there with excellent advice. Thanks are also due to Elizabeth Ault and Jessica Ryan for their consistent help, to Rebecca Fowler for some exceptionally good copy-editing, and to my anonymous reviewers of the original manuscript.

I owe most of all to my wife, Joanna, and to my sons, Beinn and Evan. This book would not have been possible without their enduring support and love.

. . .

Some of the material presented here has appeared in an altered form in the following articles and chapters:

“Material and Memory: Photography in the Western Solomon Islands,” Journal of Material Culture 9, no. 1 (2004): 73–85 (SAGE Publications).

“‘A Devil’s Engine’: Photography and Spirits in the Western Solomon Islands,” in “Haunting Images: The Affective Power of Photography,” edited by B. Smith and R. Vokes, a special edition of Visual Anthropology 21, no. 4 (2008): 364–80 (Routledge).

“Faletau’s Photocopy, or the Mutability of Visual History in Roviana,” in Photography, Anthropology and History: Expanding the Frame, edited by Christopher Morton and Elizabeth Edwards. © Ashgate, 2009.