

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Despite our best intentions, we claim the name of author when we know how much work and affection such a nomination covers over. This book is no exception. So many people were involved in the research and thought in this volume that another might be written to honor their support and companionship, and chances are that I might omit the name of someone whose goodwill made this book possible. The thought pains me, and I hope no kindness is forgotten.

I am indebted to several friends for their love and companionship. Amy Villarejo, Barbara White, Sally Meckling, Madhava Prasad, Joy Van Fuqua, and Elayne Tobin were among the best teachers I had in graduate school, and my teachers in graduate school were more than that; they were intellectual models who made this work a pleasure: Jane Feuer, Janet Staiger, Eric Clarke, Lucy Fischer, and, finally, a scholar who offers new forms of exciting intellectual work and makes them a joy that I carry with me, Marcia Landy. Many people were kind to me at moments when it wasn't clear whether this project was viable and I needed some guidance and cheer: Steven Cohan, Ina Hark, Douglas Crimp, Colin MacCabe, Eric Smoodin, Caren Kaplan, Jonathan Arac, Carol Kay, Paul Bové, Eve Sedgwick, Paul Smith, Carol Stabile, John Groch, and Allen Larson. Timothy Credle, Stewart Waller, Alison Hoff, Patrick Clark, Jamie Poster, Anna McCarthy, and Tara McPherson are the best of friends. Diana Reed and Barbara Fine bought me dinners and told me I could finish this work. My colleagues at Georgetown, Pamela Fox, Kim Hall, Ed Ingebretsen, Colleen Cotter, Christine So, and Anne Cubilie made my entry to faculty life an immense pleasure; Michael Ragussis showed me how to write a book. Ken Wissoker not only is the editor who asked me to keep working on this project and waited patiently for it but also extended love and friendship. Cathy Davidson single-handedly reminds me that intellectuals can and should work to remake the world, and I send her a big valentine.

Ned Comstock at the archives at the University of Southern California and Barbara Johnson at the Margaret Herrick Library of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences are astonishing resources, and the Minnelli chapter could not have been done without their help. Peter Haldeman and Peter Jones in Los Angeles were sweet to a stranger in a strange place, and George Feltenstein at MGM told me I was right to keep working. Matt Wrban, John Smith, Margery King, and Greg Pierce at the Andy Warhol Museum, Callie Angell at the Whitney Museum of American Art, and Neil Prinz at the Andy Warhol Foundation were wonderfully generous and made possible much of the work on Warhol and Anger. John Waters let me ask my questions and answered them with patience and good humor. Ryan Cook kindly helped with the illustrations; Heather Kerst and Mary Madden helped to complete the final manuscript.

The Lambda Foundation of Pittsburgh took a risk early in this project and provided the funds for research in Los Angeles for the Minnelli chapter; an Andrew Mellon Doctoral Fellowship at the University of Pittsburgh allowed me to complete a first draft of this research. Summer research grants and a Junior Sabbatical from Georgetown College and the Graduate School allowed me the chance to rethink the entire project once more, and I am grateful to Leona Fisher, Joseph Sitterson, Martin Irvine, and Gerald Mara for making that possible. I thank the anonymous readers of the book manuscript.

James and Alberta Tinkcom, and my siblings, Mary Tinkcom, Martha Brisky, Margaret Listopad, and Michael Tinkcom, are the best of families. Matthew Veltkamp sees the goodness and the camp in the world every day, and for that and for everything else, I say again: all my love.
