

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The intellectual and emotional debts for this collection are many. Our heartfelt gratitude goes out to the numerous colleagues, friends, and well-wishers who have been engaged in this project with us at different moments of its evolution. They are the people who have inspired, challenged, encouraged, and helped us find our way through this intellectual adventure. We are especially and deeply thankful to Emily Rosenberg, Karen Warren, Karin Aguilar San Juan, Anna Meigs, Anne Runyan, Antoinette Burton, Lisa Disch, Amy Kaminsky, Peter Rachleff, Anna Agathangelou, Jan Jindy Pettman, Valentine Moghadam, Amrita Basu, Patricia Fernandez-Kelly, Susan Stanford Friedman, Ketu Katrak, and Chandra Talpade Mohanty. Asif Agha and Russell Leong gave their energy and care to commenting on early versions of the project, Sandra Harding put in a timely word of support, and Shu-mei Shih staked her confidence in the intellectual vision of this collection. At Duke University Press, we would like to thank Valerie Millholland for her enthusiastic support and guidance. Also at Duke, we would like to thank Rebecca Johns-Danes, Katie Courtland, Miriam Angress, and all the people involved in the production. Nancy Zibman's thorough indexing work is invaluable. The two anonymous reviewers gave us rigorous readings and stimulating critiques of the collection as a whole and of individual contributions. We have appreciated and gained from their suggestions.

We extend special thanks to all our contributors for their faith in this project, their patience, their cooperation in rewriting to our exacting standards and, most of all, for their rich and insightful works. Their feminist visions have sharpened our sense of this book.

In addition to the people already acknowledged, Sonita would like to thank her wonderful companion, Behrooz Abshar, and Babuji, her father. Then there are, of course, her students. And her friends Ana Lois-Borzi, Damon Brinson, and Jael Silliman. Esha thanks Suranjan for nurturing her intellectual endeavors and for his quiet but unfailing optimism. And she offers this collection to all those wonderful students who have, over the years, come to her classes on South and Southeast Asian women and energetically discussed globalization and gender. In the process of imagining, compiling, and editing this book, we have learned from each other's feminisms and grown intellectually through thinking together. Sonita is grateful to Esha for being an indispensable catalyst. Esha thanks Sonita for creating the term "trans-status subject" and for the unflagging intellectual energy and hard labor she has brought to every stage of the publication process.
