

Acknowledgments

From my time as a graduate student in the Department of Art and Art History at Stanford University I would like to thank my dissertation advisor, Alexander M. Nemerov. The dissertation, and the book that it has now evolved into, owe much to his pedagogy, his high standards, and his belief in my abilities. Similarly, I owe my second chair and de facto advisor, Wanda M. Corn, unending gratitude for the challenges she set before me and for all that she has taught me. I am also indebted to the other members of my committee, Pamela M. Lee of Stanford and Judith Wilson of the University of California, Irvine, for their attentive criticism and continued support.

At Harvard I have benefited from the generous attention of my many distinguished colleagues, foremost among them Suzanne Blier, Werner Sollors, Karen C. C. Dalton, Kimberley McClain DaCosta, Jeffrey Hamburger, Robin Kelsey, David Roxburgh, Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham, and Tommie Shelby. Special thanks go to my department chairs, Ioli Kalavrezou and Yve-Alain Bois in History of Art and Architecture and Henry Louis Gates Jr. in African and African American Studies for helping me to secure fellowship support for my research. I am particularly grateful for the attention of the late Richard Newman, director of research at the W. E. B. Du Bois Institute. Richard was both a gracious reader and a nonstop cheerleader who helped me to thrive in my first year of professional teaching and writing. I also wish to thank my research assistants Rebecca Keegan and Monique Bell.

Many members of the Americanist community in the Boston area have also offered help and support, including Eric Rosenberg at Tufts University and especially Patricia Hills of Boston University, who has selflessly mentored me over the past three years. And thanks to Estelle Freedman in Stanford's History Department and Janet C. Berlo of the University of Rochester for being unofficial advisors of supreme impact and importance.

I wish to acknowledge the support of the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard University and the Art History Department at Boston University for hosting my Ford Foundation Minority Postdoctoral Fellowship during my sabbatical in 2002–2003. Without the time, space, and support that these institutions provided I would not have been able to finish my revisions on this book. I would also like to thank my fellow fellows at Radcliffe, who provided me with great insight and many good references.

I was pleased to have been able to present pieces of this work in several public venues, including the W. E. B. Du Bois Institute for African American Studies at Harvard University, the College Art Association annual meetings in 1999 and in 2001, the University of Rochester Art Gallery, Tufts University, Rhode Island College, Wesleyan University, the University of Western Ontario, London, and the Ringling School of Art and Design in Sarasota. A portion of chapter 5 can be found in the essay "Final Cut," in Parkett, no. 59 (2000). An early version of chapter 2 is included in the forthcoming volume Trauma and Visual Representation in Modernity edited by Lisa Saltzman and Eric Rosenberg (University Press of New England, 2004).

I would also like to acknowledge the support of my family and friends, without whom there would be no reason to work so hard or to even get up in the morning.

Final thanks go out to Kara Walker, who gave me access to her artistic practice as well as a new understanding of my own academic interests. I hope that she will find my thoughts on her work as interesting as I have found her work to think about.
