

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This volume has been long in the making and depended on the assistance of many friends and colleagues. We found critical inspiration for this project in the work of Ammiel Alcalay, Edward Said, and Ella Shohat; while none of these scholars was able to contribute to the volume, their early interest and support for the initiative was critical in its realization. Portions of this volume were originally presented as papers in a panel that we organized for the American Anthropological Association Meetings in November 2001. Thanks to Nadia Abu El-Haj and Susan Slyomovics, who offered insightful critiques in their capacity as discussants and helped shape the volume to come. Joel Beinin, Yael Ben-Zvi, Robert Blecher, Elliott Colla, Andrew Janiak, Zachary Lockman, and Shira Robinson provided generous consultation and constructive commentary during the course of the volume's production. Particular thanks are due to the contributors, whose pioneering work on issues of popular culture in Palestine and Israel made this volume possible; we thank them for their incredibly hard work in bringing this text to publication. Elizabeth Angel did extensive editorial work on the manuscripts and helped all of us to clarify and strengthen our arguments. At Duke Press, Ken Wissoker's enthusiasm for the project, intellectual support, and critical advice was this volume's backbone. Courtney Berger's enormous editorial care and heavy lifting was invaluable as the volume went into production. Kate Lothman skillfully moved the manuscript into its final stages. Thanks also to our partners and families for their patience, encouragement, and support. And to our colleagues and friends at Middle East Report; this volume grows out of our collective struggle for justice in Palestine and Israel.
