

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book has been a long journey without distance, and the travelers have been varied and many. I am indebted to the regional feminist movement in the Caribbean, members of the Caribbean Association for Feminist Research and Action, the SISTREN theatre collective of Jamaica, Development Alternatives for Women (DAWN) of the Bahamas, and the Audre Lorde Project of Brooklyn, New York, the only national organization committed to lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and two-spirit people of color communities, for the consistency with which you bring a deep vision for social justice into the nitty-gritty work of political organizing. You bring a politics of hope to these perilous times of empire-building and you consistently sustain those of us who temporarily sojourn in the academy. I am also indebted to those who are fearless in providing models of activist scholarship, including among others, Jennifer Abod, Angela Davis, Brenda Joyner, Margo Okazawa-Rey and Julia Sudbury; to writers Chrystos, Dionne Brand, Kamau Brathwaite, Audre Lorde, Cherríe Moraga and Toni Morrison, whose work brings us always to the edge of uncompromising consistency; to Angela Bowen (also grammarian extraordinaire), Linda Carty, Gloria Joseph (patient revolutionary and outrageous critic), Barbara Herbert, Jerma Jackson, Gary Lemons, Gail Lewis, Chandra Talpade Mohanty, Papusa Molina, Amit Rai and Gloria Wekker for your love, abiding friendship, astute eyes and staunch intellectual companionship; to fellow travelers Marion Bethel, Carole Boyce Davies, Tristan Borer, Drucilla Cornel, Cynthia Enloe, Janet Gezari, Monisha dasGupta, Ana-Louise Keating, Andrée Nicola McLaughlin, Gita Patel, Chandan Reddy, Tracy Robinson and Alissa Trotz; to Jinny Chalmers, who first suggested this collection, and Lynn Comella, who began its painstaking assembly; to Jessica Badonsky, Sangeeta Budiraja, Nova Vaughn-Burnet, Ana Christie, Claudia Veronica Brignolo-Giménez, Annalis Herman, Tamara Irons, Paul Lai, Silvia Panzironi, Ursula Wolfe-Roca, David Sartorius, Giovanna Torcio, and Heather Sibley for exceptional research assistance; to Payal Banerjee, Nova Gutierrez, and Constanza Morales-Mair for your commitment to excellence and generous support at crucial junctures; to Susannah Driver-Barstow and Jody Shapiro for keen readings of chapters 3 and 4 and chapter 5 respectively; to AnaLouise Keating for your generosity and the keen editorial sense you brought to chapter 6; to Beverly Hutchinson and Urayoana Trinidad, your healing touch worked as restorative on many an occasion; and to Maggy Carrot and Sylvia Villaroel for unconditional friendship and a quiet passion that teaches how not to take the world for granted.

I dedicate chapter 4 to The Mobilization for Real Diversity, Democracy and Economic Justice, which directed its labor toward overturning instrumental diversity at the New School University between 1996 to 1998, and to all undergraduate and graduate students as you learn that the journey with the life of the mind and the journey with life are twin streams in the same dreaming. I circulated early drafts of the chapter to thirty-five members of The Mobilization and I am especially grateful to Saradhamanidevi Boopathi, Scott Carter, Jan Clausen, Mustafa Emirbayer, Leslie Hill, Gary Lemons, Kerry MacNeil, Laura Poitras, Amit Rai, Gregory Tewksbury and Michelle Zamora for your willingness to revisit the political struggle, wade into your memories and transform my recollections. Mirangela Buggs, Mustafa Emirbayer, and Janet Gezari, your generosity, exceptional thoroughness, and political adeptness made the final draft suited for the public eye. I thank among others Brenda Joyner, Sy Khan and Colia Clarke for pivotal conversations and support when the going was rough and I thank all of our supporters, academics and activists, poets and public intellectuals who wrote letters of solidarity that simply put, kept us going.

To the organizers of Theorizing Transnationality, Gender and Citizenship of the Women and Gender Studies Institute at the University of Toronto, public lecture series 2002–2003 and the Thinking Sex Transnationally series at the University of Seattle at Washington where preliminary sketches of chapter 5 were first presented, I am grateful for your commitment to create and maintain intellectual neighborhoods that cross the boundaries of the academy.

Chapter 6 honors Cherríe Moraga and Gloria Anzaldúa who gave birth to the original vision of This Bridge Called My Back. To Vincent Woodard and the Black Cultural Studies Seminar at Tufts, I am thankful for the provocatively fruitful discussions that enlivened chapter seven. And I am enormously grateful to Payal Banerjee, Honor Ford Smith, Tamara Irons, Cassandra Lord, Susan Mintz, Rubie Nottage, Robin Riley, Tracy Robinson, Cara Schlesinger, Rhoma Spencer and Xochipala Maes Valdez for your generosity during the apparently unending last-minute crunch in the assembly of notes and fragments of data and the attention you brought to formatting and style; to Pat Murphy, you bring to proof-reading an unusual combination of craft and wit; to Carolyn Watson for your diligent reading of the entire manuscript, and to Laurie Prendergast for your astute indexing.

My sincerest appreciation to Judith Halberstam and Lisa Lowe, series editors of Perverse Modernities, for your staunch commitment to this project; the copyeditor and anonymous readers for your attunement to the intellectual vagaries of Pedagogies; Raphael Allen, former acquisitions editor at Duke who first demonstrated interest in this book; Ken Wissoker, editor-in-chief for your dedication, guidance and acuity; Justin Faerber for your meticulous attention; Katie Courtland and Michael McCollough for your efficiency and warm professionalism; and Courtney Berger for your sensitive attention to administrative matters.

I am humbled by the process of making spiritual community—the ongoing work of pursuing different Sacred paths to knowing and of the ongoing challenge involved in internalizing, that is living, the belief that all things are interconnected. I am indebted to my teachers: Danny Dawson who introduced me to my Bakongo teacher Bunseki Kimbwandende Kia Fu-kiau, whose steady guidance led me straight to Mayombe in the Kongo to his teacher/father/uncle Papa Vweba, who has since transitioned;

Paulo Bispo, Suzette James, Patricia James, Florence Jean-Joseph, Joan Noray, Verna St. Rose Greaves, Baba Henry White and my youngest brother Ngozi Obasi Umoja for that rare combination of unconditional love and spiritual likemindedness; the ceremonial fire-keepers and water carriers determined to honor Spirit: Cherríe Moraga, Celia Herrera-Rodriguez, Carmencita Vicente of the Saraguro Medicine Lodge, Ecuador, and Xochipala Maes Valdez; those committed to the search for cosmic truth without borders, Minister Marie Knight and members of Gates of Prayer, Harlem, New York; Mama Lola; Madrina Teresa Ramirez; Ojugarbona Juanita Rodriguez; Norm Rosenberg and Ticia Roth of Pangea Farm; Luisa Teish; Mother Veronica; and Marta Morena Vega.

And finally my deepest gratitude to my ancestors on whose shoulders I stand; to Maya, my daughter, you teach me always about grace and courage; and to Xochipala Maes Valdes, my partner, for the honesty of your love and for your commitment to show up for this appointment with life.
