

Acknowledgments

The materials contained in this book evolved over the course of five years, which happened to be a particularly difficult, challenging, and finally rewarding period in my personal and professional life. The writing process played a meaningful role in my analyzing and understanding the personal process, and thus in surviving it. Although the turbulence of this period hindered and slowed the creative process, it contributed to my sensitivity to and compassion for (women's) predicament and pain, and thus, I hope, to the depth of my analysis. This book holds much energy and passion inspired by various stages of a long process of injury, battle, and healing.

Many people supported me in the personal journey that coincided with the writing of this book, and I am forever grateful to them. Special thanks to Dina Wardi, John Hartman, Nita Schechet, Rachel Benziman, Batya Segal, Roni Weinstein and Dorit Lerer, Uri Sadeh, Michal Steinman, Barbara Garavaglia, Roberta Nerrison Low, Audrey Macklin, Rebecca Johnson, Pnina Lahav, Richard Lempert and Lisa Khan, James Boyd White, Omri Ben-Shachar, Yvonne, Dan, and Steve Kaplan, and, of course, my family.

I am beholden to the many fabulous students, in Israel, Michigan, and Slovenia, with whom I discussed and analyzed the films, and to friends and colleagues who graciously introduced me to films, read endless drafts, and helped with the editing. Among them are Ori Baron, Anita Bernstein, Rivka Elisha, Dror Elner, Phoebe Ellsworth, Ruth Gavison, Barbara Garavaglia, Ana Ruxandra Iacob (who graciously compiled the index), David Kretzmer, Audrey Macklin, Mariana Meisls, Hana Ovnat, Goran Selanec, Yoram Shachar, Marc Spindelman, Yofi Tirosh, and Zvika Triger. I am grateful to the forums at the University of Toronto law school, University of Victoria law school, and McGill University law school for their discussion and helpful comments, as well as to the editors of and contributors to the edited volume Law on the Screen (Sarat, 2005).

Parts of several chapters have been previously published separately over the years, and I am thankful for the permission to republish them here. I am also thankful to Valerie Millholland, Leah Stewart, and the staff of Duke University Press.

This book could not have been written if not for the incredibly generous, active participation and investment of Nita Schechet and Rebecca Johnson, who were with me every step of the way, and if not for the compassionate professional faith and encouragement I received from James Boyd White and Austin Sarat.

It is, as always, a pleasure to thank the University of Michigan Law School for the overwhelming generosity that facilitated the research and the writing, and in particular to thank deans Jeff Lehman and Evan Caminker.

Ever last but never least, deepest thanks to my loving family, including Pizi, who are always there for me, rain or shine.
