The intellectual and gustatory debts that accrue in researching an international study such as this are daunting. I start with my late colleague Dwight Conquergood, who listened, was intrigued, and encouraged this work from its inception; Beverly Wright, who asked zinger questions at crucial moments; and exceptional colleagues—Peter Glazer, Baz Kershaw, and Tom Postlewait—who took a great deal of time from their own work in order to substantially improve mine. Richard Schechner and Paul Boyer are also singled out for particular thanks. Special thanks also to Stefka Mihaylova, Sheila Moeschen, and Natalie Hanemann who helped prepare the final manuscript. Many Northwestern colleagues, students, and connections put information in my hands or smoothed the road in myriad ways, including Kamran Afary, Henry Binford, Steve Caruso, Beth E. Clausen, Paul Edwards, Gary Fine, Cindy Gold, Marva Golden, Virgil Johnson, Jacob Juntunen, Liz Luby, Bill McHugh, Russell Maylone, Sara Monoson, Barbara O’Keefe, Patrick Quinn, Celeste Pietrusza, Sally Roberts, Jim Schwoch, Daniel Smith Jr., Claire Stewart, Harvey Young, and Dan Zellner. Colleagues near and far have contributed instrumentally, including Aaron Anderson, Scott Bennett, Carol Burbank, Gay Gibson Cima, Mary Croarken, Jim Davis, Lesley Delmenico, Jody Enders, John Emigh, Penny Farfan, Dennis Kennedy, David Krasner, Ric Knowles, David Krugler, Michael McKinnie, Rosemary Mariner, Lisa Merrill, Kurt Piehler, Lionel Pilkington, Della Pollock, Joseph Roach, Laurence Senelick, Rose Whyman, and Jutta Wildes. I am also grateful to some of their students who assisted, including Amy Benner of the University of Tennessee, Carolyn Bain of the University of Maryland, and Melissa Hurt of Virginia Commonwealth University as well as her father Donald Hurt, an exemplary interviewee. Laurel Borisenko pointed me to important sources on international refugee protocols. Miriam Stanford and Charlene Senn taught me that not everyone in our neighborhood grew up dreading the sound of droning engines overhead, but Vera Klement reassured me I was not the only one who listened warily.

Mary and Neville Davis arranged my first visit to the Diefenbunker and hosted me for all my returns, never verbalizing doubts about this wacky preoccupation. Thanks to them and all the clan in Ottawa, and my parents, Thora and Ernie Davis, for being there too and for all the intangibles. Special acknowledgment is due to Dave Peters for guiding me through the Diefenbunker that first day and many other occasions; and to the Diefenbunker's archivist Doug Beaton, who gave me the run of the place, insightfully assembled countless incomparable treasures, and patiently answered all queries; along with Barrie Bruce, Bob Borden, Bob Biggs, Ken Farrell, Louise Fox, Hugh Gamble, Connie Murray, and Andy Renault, all vital informants.

The White House Historical Association and Dwight D. Eisenhower Presidential Library funded research trips, along with Northwestern University's faculty research grants program and the Ethel E. Barber bequest. A Benjamin Meaker Professorship from the Institute for Advanced Studies at Bristol University helped in the later stages of work, and I am indebted to the whole Theatre and Film Department at Bristol for their warm welcome. I am grateful to archivists and librarians at the National Library of Canada, National Archives and Records Administration in College Park (especially Tab Lewis), Library of Congress (Humanities and Social Sciences; Manuscripts; and Motion Picture, Broadcasting and Recorded Sound Division), Federal Emergency Training Center Learning Resources Center in Emmitsburg, Md. (especially Julie Beacon), Swarthmore Peace Collection, John F. Kennedy Presidential Library (especially Stephen Plotkin and Sharon Kelly), Dwight D. Eisenhower Presidential Library (especially David Haight), National Library of Medicine in Bethesda, Md., Historical Society of Washington, D.C., Stanford University Libraries Department of Special Collections, and Harold Washington Library of the Chicago Public Libraries (Municipal Reference Collection).

Robert Jurquet and Anne-Marie Smith of the NATO Archives in Brussels are singled out for special appreciation. Thanks also to the Public Record Office (London), British Library, Imperial War Museum Department of Film and Video (especially Matthew Lee), Corporation of London Record Office, Scout Association in London (especially Pat Styles), British Red Cross, Bristol Record Office, Bristol Central Library, National Archives of Ireland, East Sussex Record Office, Boosey and Hawkes, and David Scott of the Central Emergency Planning Unit of the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister of Northern Ireland. Thanks also to Nelson Block who assisted by correspondence.

Portions of this book appeared in other forms in Modern Drama, TDR: The Drama Review, The Handbook of Performance Studies, and Asaph.

Finally, thanks to my editors at Duke, Ken Wissoker and Courtney Berger, for their faith in the project and unwavering good counsel.
