

Acknowledgments

This book has been long in the making, and I have many people and institutions to thank. I am grateful to the librarians and archivists of Indian Office Library and Records (incorporated into the British Library partway through my research), the National Archives of India, the Nehru Memorial Library and Museum, the Scottish National Library, the Gokhale Institute, the Cambridge South Asia Centre Library, the State Library of Victoria, and the Borchardt library of La Trobe University – especially its Inter-Library Loans section. The Australia Research Council provided small grants to facilitate research trips, as did La Trobe University, which also provided a supportive and congenial environment in which to write. The Japan Society for the Promotion of Science awarded me a year-long fellowship to work on this book; I am grateful to Professor Nariaki Nakazato and the Toyo Bunka Kenkyujo of Tokyo University for hosting me during a blissful year when I was able to work obsessively on the manuscript. Earlier versions of some of these chapters were presented at New Delhi, Princeton, Minneapolis, New York, Chicago, Santa Cruz, Berlin, Tokyo, Edinburgh, Melbourne, and Brisbane; my thanks to my audiences at these occasions, and to the organizers of these talks.

Many friends and colleagues have answered queries, provided references, and made helpful suggestions; my thanks to Shahid Amin, Robin Jeffrey, Francesca Orsini, John Fitzgerald, the late Ravinder Kumar, Pauline Nestor, Hilary McPhee, Joel Kahn, Barbara Cain, Angus McIntyre, Richard Delacy, Sudhir Chandra, Kama Maclean, Greg Bailey, the late Fred Hardy, Ashok Aklujkar, Dennis Altman, Joel Kahn, Robert Manne, and Kunal Chakrabarti. My thanks also to Sarbajeet Mukherjee for rendering research assistance in the National Library, Calcutta.

A number of colleagues read and commented on one or more chapters of this book. I am grateful to Ranajit Guha, Sumit Sarkar, Tanika Sarkar, Robin Archer, Leela Gandhi, Michael Dutton, Ian Hunter, Anita Ray, and Nariaki Nakazato for taking the trouble to do so, and for their comments and criticisms. I am grateful to Julia Adams and Reynolds Smith for editorial feedback and for shepherding this book through the publication process, and to Fred Kameny for his very professional copy editing.

Since my graduate student days Dipesh Chakrabarty has been a friend and interlocutor, and he has read, commented upon, and discussed this book with me over the years that it has taken to write it. It gives me pleasure to acknowledge my debt to him, and to thank him. Barry Hindess once again demonstrated that there is no more acute reader of an argument, with a keen eye for flaws and evasions; I hope that there are, thanks to his comments, fewer of these than there might have been. Akeel Bilgrami engaged me in long-distance debates during my year in Tokyo, and his comments have never failed to be stimulating and challenging. Rajyashree Pandey read the chapters through their successive drafts, and offered unconditional encouragement coupled with unconstrained criticism!

Many friends offered sustenance and hospitality while I was away from home: in India, Sudhir Chandra, Geetanjali Shree, Atul Joshi, Jayanti Pandey, Sara Rai, and Muhammad Aslam; in England, Terry Shakhanovsky, Robin Archer, Chris Macpherson, Greg Patching, and above all the Hardy family; and in Japan, Sonoe Matsui and her family. A community of friends in Melbourne provided occasions for ongoing addas; my thanks to Deborah Kessler, Pauline Nestor, and my fellow editors of Postcolonial Studies, Amanda Macdonald, Michele Grossman, and – especially – Leela Gandhi and Michael Dutton.

I am unusually blessed in that my siblings constitute not only my affective, but also my intellectual, community. I subjected Vanita Seth and Suman Seth to endless drafts of the manuscript, which they read with acuity and humor. It remains a source of great sadness to me that my mother, the person who would have derived the greatest pleasure from seeing this book in print, is not here to see it. My father has been a source of unqualified support and encouragement in this as in other endeavors. I owe him and my mother more than could ever be acknowledged.

Finally, and closest to home, Rajyashree and Nishad Pandey have provided me with a world which includes, but also extends well beyond, thinking and writing. I dedicate this to them.
