

Acknowledgments

Although it is impossible to acknowledge every single person who has lavished on me the motivation and sense of purpose required to write this book, thanks are due to those who assisted in enabling its completion.

First I wish to thank James Clifford, Teresa de Lauretis, and Kirsten Silva Gruesz for their critical feedback and mentorship that profoundly shaped the thinking that went into this project in its initial incarnation as a dissertation. While a graduate student in History of Consciousness at the University of California, Santa Cruz, I also benefited from the invaluable guidance of José David Saldívar, Angela Y. Davis, Lourdes Martínez-Echazábal, Susan Gillman, Hayden White, Chris Connery, and Patricia Zavella.

Many scholars have graciously given their time and support, which made the book possible. For their generosity and timely interventions, I am particularly thankful to Sonia Saldívar-Hull, Jorge Mariscal, John Carlos Rowe, José Esteban Muñoz, Judith Halberstam, Alfred Arteaga, David Lloyd, Alicia Gaspar de Alba, Genaro Padilla, Norma E. Cantú, Rafael Pérez-Torres, Francisco Balderrama, Ricardo L. Ortiz, Curtis Márez, Alicia Arrizón, Marta López-Garza, Tomás Ybarra-Frausto, Marilyn Elkins, Carlos Muñoz, Jr., Lionel Maldonado, Norma Alarcón, Chon Noriega, and Vicki Ruíz. In addition, Pete Sigal, Catrióna Rueda Esquibel, Luz Calvo, Ernesto Chávez, Jerry Miller, José Alamillo, Ellie D. Hernández, Talia Bettcher, Michael Hames-García, Ernesto J. Martínez, Lilia Fernández, John Ramírez, David Hernández, Catherine Ramírez, Karen Tongson, Ramón García, and Wendy White have given the gift of collegiality fused with intellectual insight, critical feedback, laughter, and breathtaking wit. Dionne Espinoza is my confidant, coconspirator, and brilliant friend for whom I'm always appreciative. Lily Castillo-Speed is every Chicano/a studies scholar's reference savior.

At the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign and in the Midwest in general many people helped me reassess and strengthen this project. For offering repeated doses of insight, support, and friendship, I am most indebted to Arlene Torres, Martin Manalansan, Siobhan Somerville, Lisa Cacho, David Coyoca, Isabel Molina, Junaid Rana, Mirelsie Velázquez, Veronica Kann, Aidé Acosta, Abel Correa, Rigoberto González, Johanna Galarte, Maria del Mar González-González, Wanda Pillow, Laurence Parker, Robert Dale Parker, Michael Rothberg, Dale Bauer, Gordon Hutter, Lauren Goodlad, Sandy and Martin Camargo, Ariana Ruíz, Natalie Havlin, Isabel Quintana-Wulf, Kim O'Neill, Rudy Aguilar, Antonia Darder, Brian Montes, Alicia P. Rodríguez, Victoria González, Olga Sofer, Amelia Montes, Rolando J. Romero, Curt McKay, and Laura Castañeda.

One can tell by perusing this book that the work of numerous writers, artists, and cultural workers enabled the generation of my ideas and arguments. For this I am grateful, but I would be remiss not to mention that they have repeatedly shaped and reshaped my worldviews. I especially want to thank Eugene Rodríguez, Harry Gamboa Jr., Barbara Carrasco, Jesús Salvador Treviño, Augie Robles, Gronk, Aurora Sarabia, Dan Guerrero, Deadlee, and Héctor Silva.

Then there are the friends who have stuck with me through the thick and the very thin. They include Francisco J. Ceja, Alejandro Lara, Miguel Ramírez, Alberto Vaca, Vanessa Alvarado, Keri Castañeda, Monica López, Enrique Orozco, Juan Chávez, Angel Carrillo, Susana Martínez, Obiel Leyva, Javier Vásquez, Marcus Cordero, Larry Padua, Mario A. Hernández, Carlos Moreno, Fred Wells, Alex Espinosa, and Carlos Samaniego.

Over the years, my students have bestowed upon me innumerable intellectual gifts, and indeed their interventions and provocations never ceased to make an indelible mark on my commitment to teaching, my relationship to academia, and, of course, my scholarship of which this book is representative. While Luis E. Ramírez, Sonia A. Rodríguez, Luis Benavides, Steven Rosado, David Orta, Will García, Natalie Lira, Brenda Rodríguez, Andy Robledo, Anona Whitley, Christopher Garibay, Joe and Jesse Palencia, Jaime Olmos, Diana Rodríguez, Albert Flores, Nathan McKeown, David Rodríguez, Oscar Rivera, Lucas McKeever, Tim Meyers, Berenice Vargas, Pearce Durst, Eric Téllez, Daniel Nuñez, Juan López,

Miguel Saucedo, Victor Benitez, Rubén Martínez, Carlos Lazaro, Jessica Guzmán, Pablo Quintana, and Tiana Carrillo quickly come to mind, there are additional luminaries who have enrolled in my courses and with whom I have worked in various capacities that warrant my gratitude.

At Duke University Press I am thankful to J. Reynolds Smith and Sharon Torian for their unflagging dedication and patience. To G. Neal McTighe and Michael Wakoff, thanks are due for their meticulous editorial skills. I also wish to thank the anonymous readers of the manuscript who helped kick it into shape.

A portion of chapter 1 was published as “Serial Kinship: Representing La Familia in Early Chicano Publications,” Aztlán: A Journal of Chicano Studies 27 (spring 2002): 123–38, and is reproduced with permission. Portions of chapter 3 appeared as “The Verse of the Godfather: Signifying Family and Nationalism in Chicano Rap and Hip-Hop Culture,” in Velvet Barrios: Popular Culture and Chicana/o Sexualities, ed. Alicia Gaspar de Alba, copyright 2003 by Palgrave Macmillan, and are reproduced with permission of Palgrave Macmillan.

Truth be told, I couldn't have gone very far without my family. I therefore thank all my cousins, aunts, and uncles who have sustained me for as far back as I can remember. My grandmother Mary Valdez and my late grandfather Sam F. Valdez have taught me so much about unconditional support. My sister Renée Rodríguez-Merino and my brother-in-law Eddie Merino are both kin and political allies. And last but not least, my parents, Richard Rodríguez and Diane Valdez, have given me so much for which I will always be grateful. With all of my heart, I love them.
