

Acknowledgments

For their patience with my inquisitive presence, and for their immeasurable insights and assistance, I thank the citizens and employees of the Seminole Tribe of Florida.

This book began as a dissertation at New York University, advised primarily by Karen Blu, Fred Myers, and Faye Ginsburg. Their imprint on this book is evident, and each offered guidance and kindness throughout. Karen was a wonderful chair. Excellent dissertation feedback also came from committee members Andrew Ross, William Sturtevant, and Thomas Abercrombie, and I thank other faculty who contributed to this project, including Lila Abu-Lughod, Owen Lynch, Jeff Himpele, and T. O. Beidelman. Graduate school colleagues made this possible and even fun, especially Ayse Parla, Nicole Rudolph, Elizabeth Smith, Omri Elisha, Winifred Tate, Jessica Winegar, Julie Chu, Jong Bum Kwon, and Kristin Dowell. I am grateful to Elizabeth Weatherford for a post at the Film and Video Center of the National Museum of the American Indian.

William Sturtevant and JoAllyn Archambault sponsored my Smithsonian Predoctoral Fellowship. Sturtevant shared his remarkable knowledge and field notes, and I can only hope that this book does some justice to his legacy. Thanks, too, to Sally McLendon. While conducting archival research in Washington and Florida, I relied on the skilled assistance of staff members at the University of Florida Samuel Proctor Oral History Program, the University of Florida Archives, the National Anthropological Archives, the National Archives, the Library of Congress, and the National Indian Gaming Association Library and Resource Center.

The School of American Research (now the School for Advanced Research) is an extraordinary environment for writing. Special thanks to those who offered sustained engagement in Santa Fe: Lawrence Cohen, J. Kehaulani Kauanui, Bruce Knauft, Circe Sturm, Jason Yaeger, Rebecca Allahyari, Randolph Lewis, Catherine Cocks, James Brooks, Richard Leventhal, and Nancy Owen-Lewis.

At the University of Chicago I found a community that offered not only intellectual stimulation but also care. I am enormously grateful to my intrepid and inspired writing group coconspirators, Jennifer Cole, Judith Farkuhar, Kesha Fikes, and Danilyn Rutherford. Shannon Dawdy commented on the entire manuscript, and I also received astute readings from Jean Comaroff, John Comaroff, and Michael Silverstein. Raymond Fogelson has contributed many insights. Thanks to E. Summerson Carr. Laura-Zoe Humphreys and Simon May provided research assistance, and graduate students taught me much in seminars on the Conditions of Indigeneity; Money and Value; and Sovereignty, Citizenship, and Nation.

Other helpful comments and readings came from Lauren Berlant, Erin Debenport, Tim Duane, Loretta Fowler, Alexandra Harmon, Willie Johns, C. Miranda Johnson, LaVonne Kippenberger, Valerie Lambert, Sally Merry, Robert Moore, Elizabeth Povinelli, Audra Simpson, Patsy West, and Noah Zatz. Jim Shore, Jason Jackson, and Jacob Osceola were generous with their time and expertise throughout, each leaving a mark on this book, and James Billie and Mitchell Cypress extended their support. I could not have pursued this research without the efforts of Katherine Spilde Contreras. Audiences engaged with my work during lectures and workshops at Cornell University, the University of Minnesota, the University of Wisconsin, Ball State University, Scripps College, Sarah Lawrence College, the University of Chicago, the University of New Mexico, UCLA, the Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development, and the Newberry Library. Coauthors and editors of Native Pathways and Beyond Red Power opened new conversations. I am grateful to Ken Wissoker, Christine Dahlin, Courtney Berger, Molly Balikov, Heather Hensley, reviewers, and everyone at Duke University Press for their confidence and expertise. Nancy Zibman prepared the index, and Julian Dibbell proofread the manuscript. Needless to say, the book's shortcomings and errors remain my responsibility.

This research was generously funded by grants and fellowships, including a National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellowship, American Association of University Women American Dissertation Fellowship, Woodrow Wilson Dissertation Grant in Women's Studies, Smithsonian Institution Predoctoral Fellowship, American Philosophical Society Phillips Fund Grant for Native American Research, School of American Research Weatherhead Fellowship, and New York University fellowships including the Kriser Fellowship in Urban Anthropology, the NYU Alumnae Club Scholarship, and various departmental and university scholarships. The University of Chicago Department of Anthropology Lichtstern Fund supported additional research. I was honored to be the first recipient of NYU's Annette B. Weiner Graduate Fellowship in Cultural Anthropology.

I came to academia by an unlikely path. Thanks to the people of Saxon, Hurley, and Ironwood for offering benefit concerts, car washes, and institutional and individual contributions that sent me to school; Telluriders for opening up the world of academia; and the many teachers at Interlochen and Cornell who built my strengths and chipped away at my deficiencies. Special thanks to my parents, Joe and Pat Cattelino, and to my aunts and uncles, siblings, nieces and nephews, and the Zatz family. Noah Zatz is a remarkable thinker, reader, and partner who has stuck with this project for its duration, and with me for even longer.
