

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

IT GIVES ME ENORMOUS PLEASURE to thank everyone who has helped make this edition possible. My greatest debt, as always, is to my husband Martin, who has accompanied me throughout the intellectual odyssey of rediscovering Tourgée. H. Bruce Franklin not only introduced me to Bricks Without Straw and urged me many years ago to try teaching it, but supported this project at every stage, from the drafting of the proposal to the completion of the introduction. My students at Temple University, especially Hank Dallman, whose articulate letter I sent to publishers, deserve much of the credit for convincing two presses that the novel would find a ready course market. Mark Elliott shared his research on Tourgée with extraordinary generosity, providing numerous leads and professional contacts. The introduction has also benefited from the incisive criticism and valuable suggestions of Otto H. Olsen, Mark Elliott, Brook Thomas, H. Bruce Franklin, Jane Franklin, Jeannie Pfaelzer, and Thorell Tsomondo. Librarians have furnished me with crucial assistance. I particularly thank Charles E. Wright and Hubert Steward of the Interlibrary Loan Division at the University of Maryland's McKeldin Library; reference librarians Thomas Mann, David Kelly, and Sheridan Harvey of the Library of Congress; James O'Brien, president of the Chautauqua County Historical Society (CCHS), the repository of the Albion W. Tourgée Papers; and Ellen Schwanekamp, former assistant director of the CCHS's McClurg Museum. I am grateful to the Chautauqua County Historical Society for permission to quote from the Tourgée Papers. Finally, I thank Reynolds Smith for piloting the book through Duke University Press with such contagious enthusiasm.
