

Acknowledgments

First and foremost I express my greatest gratitude to the many adoptees who tolerated my presence and questions, welcomed me into their lives, and contributed their words and experiences to this ethnography. I have appreciated many of them not only as crucial interlocutors but also as cherished friends and colleagues. Much of what I have learned about Korean adoption has been due to the indispensable and foundational research of Tobias Hübinette and from my innumerable conversations with Kim Park Nelson, whose friendship represents one of the many rewards of my fieldwork experience. The everyday reflections, opinions, advice, and ongoing friendships of Me-K Ahn, Jackie Aronson, HyoSung Lee Bidol, HyoJung Bidol, Sarah Kim-Tomcek, Deann Borshay Liem, Lisa Hanson, kate hers, Hosu Kim, Hollee McGinnis, Sarah Park, KimSu Theiler, Jane Jeong Trenka, and Maya Weimer have informed my thinking and encouraged me in countless ways.

Susan Soon-Keum Cox early on saw the value in research on the first generation of adult Korean adoptees, and I deeply appreciate her willingness to let me volunteer for the first Gathering conference in 1999 and her subsequent generosity with her time and extensive knowledge. When I first began the Korea portion of my research in 2001, Mihee Nathalie Lemoine was an expert guide and welcoming friend. Along the way, I was lucky to meet fellow researchers and adoptees engaged in their own fact-finding missions, including HyoJung Bidol, Su-Yoon Ko Burrows, Tammy Chu, Kelli Donigan, Amy Harp, Pam Jost, Eun Yung Fairbanks and JaeSik Kauffman, Jenny Na, Lene Myong Peterson, Elise Prebin, and Kim Stoker. At the Overseas Koreans Foundation (OKF), Jeannie Hong's assistance, cooperation, and friendship were crucial to my research and own sense of belonging in Korea. I was very lucky to find Kim Do Hyun, a fellow researcher and a dedicated advocate for adoptees, managing KoRoot when I returned to Korea in 2004, and to coincide with Dae-won Kim's tenure at Global Overseas Adoptees' Link (GOA'L). I hope that some of the wisdom and insights I gathered from conversations with both Dae-won and Reverend Kim have found their way into these pages. Other staff and volunteers from International Korean Adoptee Services (INKAS), OKF, and GOA'L who helped educate me on the intricate dynamics of adoption in Korea include Jung AeRee, Hellen Ko, Ma Kyung Hee, Kim Jong Hyock, and John Hamrin.

This book first began as a dissertation project in the Anthropology Department at New York University under the guidance of Faye Ginsburg, who offered invaluable mentorship and instruction from the beginning of my graduate school career. Fred Myers, Rayna Rapp, and Lok Siu contributed their sage advice as committee members at crucial moments in the fieldwork and writing process. I was also particularly fortunate to have supportive encouragement and critical feedback from Laurel Kendall and Toby Volkman both during and after the dissertation phase.

The moral support and intellectual solidarity of friends at New York University and beyond helped see this project to fruition. Great thanks to Amahl Bishara, Kristin Dowell, Danny Fisher, Aaron Glass, Sherine Hamdy, Leo Hsu, Jessica Cattelino, Elise Andaya, Shanti Avirgan, Julie Chu, Cheryl Furjanic, Bill Horn, JongBum Kwon, Lauren Shweder, Lisa Stefanoff, Ruti Talmor, Pegi Vail, Daniel Kim, Hijoo Son, Sue-je Gage, Nicola Kountoupes, June Hwang, and especially Susie Rosenbaum.

This project was funded by a number of institutions, including the James West Memorial Fund Fellowship for my preliminary research in Korea in 2001 and the Social Science Research Council's International Dissertation Research Fellowship, which funded the American and Korean segments of my fieldwork during 2003 and 2004. Research in Korea was supported by the Fulbright Institute of International Education and made possible by the daily behind-the-scenes assistance provided by then director Horace Underwood and the staff at the Fulbright office in Seoul. At New York University the Institute for the History of the Production of Knowledge (IHPK) and the Dean's Dissertation Grant provided essential funding to support me during the writing process. Thanks to Troy Duster, Mary Poovey, Eileen Bowman, Aaron Panofsky, and Emily Cohen, and especially to Emily Martin at IHPK. Finally, the Center for Korean Studies at the University of California, Los Angeles, provided a home for me during my Korea Foundation postdoctoral fellowship, and I am particularly appreciative of John Duncan's gracious hospitality. I've found a warm and stimulating intellectual community at the University of Rochester where I've been able to see this book to completion. I extend my heartfelt thanks to Tony Carter, Ayala Emmett, Robert Foster, Thomas Gibson, and Daniel Reichman for their exceptional collegiality, and to Ro Ferreri for her tireless work on our behalf.

I benefited immensely from the feedback offered when I presented this work to various audiences at the University of British Columbia; Brown University; University of California, Los Angeles; University of Toronto; University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign; University of California, Berkeley; Wellesley College; University of Minnesota; and University of California, Irvine. I also extend my appreciation to the anonymous reviewers at Duke University Press, one of whom revealed herself to be the esteemed Elaine Kim. Ken Wissoker supported this project from the beginning and shepherded it expertly into production. Thanks also to Mandy Earley and Rebecca Fowler for their administrative support and for answering all my nagging questions. I'm also grateful to Brenda Reeb and Katie Papas at the University of Rochester Rush Rhees Library, and David Klassen at the University of Minnesota Social Welfare History Archives for their assistance with archival materials.

George Drake of the Korean War Children's Memorial Project kindly shared his recollections, connections, and extensive archive. The late Mrs. Oak Soon Hong and her daughter Juli Eisenberg graciously invited me to their home to conduct an interview, as did Susan T. Pettiss. I thank them each for enduring long conversations with a researcher struggling to grasp the events and cultural realities of 1950s South Korea and America.

Chapter 1 first appeared in the U.S.-Korea Institute at SAIS Working Paper Series (WP 09–09), and a version of chapter 5 was published in 2007 in Anthropological Quarterly 80 (2) (spring). I thank both editors for permission to reprint the contents of those articles here. I also appreciate the willingness of the artists whose work appears in these pages for allowing their images to be reproduced. "Calling Card" by kate hers (Kate Hershiser) is reproduced with permission from Yeong and Yeong Book Company. Finally, I acknowledge the Strategic Initiative for Korean Studies for awarding me a generous publication subsidy grant.

Alissa Quart, Molly Larkey, Ing Lee, and Sridhar Venkatapuram deserve special mention for their countless acts of kindness over many years, as does my extended family in Korea and New York, especially Hyeryun, SungHae and Sungsook, Sungwook, and Yeongseop. My mother, father, and brother have bolstered me with just the right balance of sympathy and cajoling discipline. My mother's courage and steadfastness and my father's boundless curiosity and profound humanism have been enduring sources of inspiration and nurturance for me. This book is dedicated to them. Finally, Rick Snyder's daily sustenance of inestimable love, intellectual clarity, and incomparable wit merits so much more than words can express.
