I thank my Mom—Sally Mae Anslyn—for her loving support in a process that I know she finds confusing for its endless supplies of acronyms and mysterious demands on my time and attentions. I simply could not have made it through the labored process of writing a book without her.

I also had the bearings of friendship along the way. Dont Rhine has loved me always and generously. Dianne Cantor listened to near daily rants on my ever-shifting levels of motivation in working on a manuscript for what seemed like a decade. J. Kēhaulani Kauanui took invaluable time at crucial moments to encourage and support me and my work. Clay Dumont offered many hours of critical insight on difficult issues. Alice Sunshine is the best roommate and kitty co-staffer ever. Melissa Nelson has been a good friend over many necessary hours of excursion from work.

I am deeply grateful to colleagues and friends who provided me with comradeship and many necessary hours of conversation and support over the years, especially Tomás Almaguer, Falu Bakrania, Luz Calvo, Robert Keith Collins, Jon Daehnke, Catriona Rueba Esquibel, Colin Farish, Jack D. Forbes, Velia Garcia, Andrew Jolivéte, Phil Klasky, Amy Lonetree, Bob McAndrews, Keta Miranda, Alfreda Mitre, Betty Parent, John Carlos Perea, Roberto Rivera, Gabriela Segovia-McGahan, Amy Sueyoshi, and Kathy Wallace.

I am indebted to advisors who spent invaluable time and energy with me, guiding me through the difficult theoretical and methodological aspects of this book. In its dissertation form, Donna Haraway, Louis Owens, and Angela Davis provided countless hours of counsel and direction. As dissertation advisor, Donna earned sainthood (if you believe in that sort of thing) for her skillful and steady negotiation of my stubbornness, density, and panic. Louis became a good friend when we were both at Davis, and he is now sorely missed. Angela posed provocative questions and challenges along with gentle guidance and direction.

I am indebted to Ken Wissoker, editorial director, Duke University Press, for his leadership and encouragement, and to the readers who provided me with invaluable editorial and bibliographic suggestions. Thank you also to Anitra Grisales for copyediting assistance at an especially crucial moment and to Timothy Elfenbein, assistant managing editor at Duke University Press, and copy editor Christine Dahlin, for their careful guidance through the final stages of production.

I was invited to present material from this study in various forums, where discussions provided me with provocative and interesting perspectives on the issues I have taken up in this book. Thanks to J. Kēhaulani Kauanui for inviting me to participate in a same-sex marriage debate with David Cornsilk and Craig Womack at the Native American and Indigenous Studies Conference at the University of Oklahoma, Norman, in May 2007. Thanks to Jean O'Brien for inviting me to participate in a roundtable discussion about recognition with J. Kēhaulani Kauanui, Amy Den Ouden, and Malinda Maynor Lowery at the Native American and Indigenous Studies Conference at the University of Georgia, Athens, in April 2008. Thanks to David Shorter, Jessica Cattelino, Mishuana Goeman, Maylei Blackwell, and other members of the Indigenous Sovereignty Research Group for reading with me the introduction and chapter six and for hosting a public presentation on disenrollment at the University of California, Los Angeles, in June 2010. Thanks to Jennifer Denetdale and Alyosha Goldstein for hosting a brown bag discussion and presentation on chapter four at the University of New Mexico in October 2010.

Several individuals gave invaluable counsel on specific chapters. All faults in the resulting arguments are my own, but I am particularly indebted to the generousities of John A. Gomez Jr., David Cornsilk, and Rusty Creed Brown for providing keen insights and sharing resources.

Postdoctoral fellowships were provided by the Ford Foundation (2005–6), San Francisco State University President’s Sabbatical (Spring 2010), and the American Indian Studies Center at the University of California, Los Angeles (2010–11).

As a note of acknowledgment, while our works are very different, the title of this book was inspired by Lisa Lowe’s Immigrant Acts: On Asian American Cultural Politics (1996), for its multiple plays with the idea of legal acts as cultural acts of identity formation.
