

Acknowledgments

The editors would like to thank the American Historical Association, the Conference on Latin American History, the New England Historical Association, and the Latin American Studies Association for providing the opportunity and context for meeting and discussing, both formally and informally, the works that appear here. Our appreciation goes also to the Hispanic American Historical Review for permission to reprint Jeffrey Gould's essay in this volume. A version of it also appears in his Duke University Press book To Die in This Way (1998). We would also like to thank Bates College, College of the Holy Cross (Mass.), Salem State College (Mass.), and the New School for Social Research for funding to attend conferences and for technical support for every aspect of this project.

For ingenious creativity and endless patience in tracking down references, we wish to express thanks to Bates reference librarian Laura Juraska. And for those last few references that could not be found in any way except by somebody physically present in Harvard's Widener Library, we thank Mara Thomas. Our appreciation goes also to Pat Chalifoux for secretarial assistance at Holy Cross and to Sylvia Hawks at Bates.

We also would like to give special thanks to the authors and to the editors at Duke for helping us follow through and complete this project.

We dedicate this book to the peoples of Central America and the Caribbean, whose struggles are only beginning to bear fruit.