

Acknowledgments

The project benefited greatly from an event held at Duke University in April 2016. We owe a huge debt of gratitude to Louise Meintjes for acquiring funding for, and largely organizing, the Remapping Sound Studies symposium. This would not have been possible without the generosity and organizational skills of three Duke University graduate students: Joella Bitter, Mary Caton Lingold, and Silvia Serrano. Thank you! We also thank the following institutions and groups within Duke University for their cosponsorship: the Franklin Humanities Institute (for a Humanities Futures Working Group award), the Department of Cultural Anthropology, the Concilium on Southern Africa, and the Ethnomusicology Working Group.

Joella Bitter, Rey Chow, Pedro Lasch, Mary Caton Lingold, Chérie Ndaliko, Marcelo Noah, and William Villalba offered invaluable feedback at the symposium through formal comments on papers. The contributors to this volume learned a lot from this thoughtful commentary. Many thanks to Jace Clayton, who delivered a stimulating lecture at the conclusion of the event.

At Duke University Press, Ken Wissoker did an incredible job shepherding this volume through to production. We thank him for his patience through many rounds of revisions and for always holding us to the highest standards. Elizabeth Ault was a tremendous force throughout the process. Thanks, Elizabeth, for your consistent support. Several anonymous reviewers also offered invaluable feedback along the way. We are very grateful to you, whoever you are. Special thanks go to Lee Veerarahavan for producing the index and to Christopher Catanese for his stellar work as project editor. And thanks to Jonathan Sterne, who read and offered feedback in his typically generous and encyclopedic style.

At the University of Pennsylvania, several graduate students kindly read and offered comments on our introduction: Elizabeth Bynum, Elise Cavicchi, and Shelley Zhang. We also benefited from a graduate seminar at Princeton University.

Finally, we thank several colleagues and friends for support and stimulating conversations: Marié Abe, Kofi Agawu, Étienne Balibar, Georgina Born, Alexandrine Boudreault-Fournier, Manuel DeLanda, Kyle Devine, Bill Dietz, Steven Feld, Lauren Flood, Roger Mathew Grant, Jocelyne Guilbault,
