

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A book is never written alone. In world-ending times of crisis, one's family, friends, and comrades are more valuable than ever, especially when one must become many. Thanks first and foremost to all the artists and practitioners whose compelling work and in some cases friendships and invaluable shared conversations have inspired my writing: John Akomfrah, Angela Melitopoulos, Angela Anderson, Jennifer Allora and Guillermo Calzadilla, Ursula Biemann, Adrian Lahoud, Collectif Argos, Eyal Weizman and Forensic Architecture, Ai Weiwei, Audrey Quinn and Jackie Roche, Charles Heller and Lorenzo Pezzani of Forensic Oceanography, Teddy Cruz and Fonna Forman, Elle Flanders and Tamira Sawatzky of Public Studio, Terri-Lynn Williams-Davidson, Laura Gustafsson and Terike Haapoja, Arthur Jafa, Martine Syms, Not an Alternative's Beka Economopoulos, Jason Jones, Steve Lyons, and Jodi Dean, Liberate Tate and Mel Evans, Dylan Miner, Canupa Hanska Luger, Amin Husain and Nitasha Dhillon of MTL and Decolonize This Place, and John Jordan and Isabelle Frémeaux of the Laboratory of Insurrectionary Imagination and the Zad.

Infinite gratitude is owed to my many intellectual, scholarly, artistic, activist, and editorial interlocutors, too many really to name, who joined me in ongoing conversations about political ecology and aesthetic practice, including Emily Eliza Scott, Subhankar Banerjee, Ashley Dawson, Yates McKee, Ros Gray, Shela Sheikh, Fazal Sheikh, Susan Schuppli, Sarah James, Julia Bryan-Wilson, Alex Alberro, Emily Pethick, Nils Norman, Oreet Ashery, Iftikhar Dadi, Nabil Ahmed, Alessandro Zagato and Natalia Arcos of GIAP (Grupo de Investigación en Arte y Política), Daniel Quiles, Béatrice Joyeux-Prunel, Eric de Bruyn, Sven Lütticken, Gopal Dayaneni of Movement Generation, Terry Smith, John Foran, Terri Weisman, Gene Moreno, Anton Vidokle, and Kaye Cain-Nielsen. I particularly appreciate their always and oftentimes tacitly reminding me that we are in this together. For their ongoing friendship, London-based hospitality, and discussions with endlessly expanding intellectual horizons, I thank Anjalika Sagar and Kodwo Eshun of The Otolith Group.

At UC Santa Cruz, I am fortunate to have many amazing and inspiring friends and colleagues, whose own work, writing, and shared discussions and the intersection of politics, theory, and cultural practice have been invaluable to me, including Donna Haraway, Karen Barad, Anna Tsing, Rachel Nelson and (formerly) John Weber of UCSC's Institute of the Arts and Sciences, Laurie Palmer, Jennifer González, Warren Sack, Beth Stephens, Annie Sprinkle, Derek Murray, Soraya Murray, Max Tomba, Banu Bargu, Anna Friz, and Miriam Greenberg. Many thanks equally to my UCSC colleagues Hunter Bivens, Mayanthi Fernando, Debbie Gould, and Matt O'Hara, who collaborated on and joined me for the Mellon Sawyer Seminar, Beyond the End of the World, which I directed at UC Santa Cruz, 2018–21, and which has also informed and benefitted this book. Much appreciation is due to Chessa Adsit-Morris, and the many participants in the Center for Creative Ecologies reading group, for the probing discussions and consideration of social-justice ecology and diverse aesthetic practices. Many thanks go as well to all the grad students, predocs, and postdocs whose work I have been involved with one way or another as supervisor, advisor, and/or examiner, and from whom I have learned much, including Amber Hickey, Sintia Issa, Zoe Weldon-Yockim, Matthew Harrison Tedford, Alex Moore, Elia Vargas, Gabriel Mindel, Martabel Wasserman, Siobhan Angus, Timothy Firstnau and Andrea Steves, Alison Dean, Ricardo Chaves, Chiara Sgaramella, Maija Lassila, Siobhan Angus, Isabelle Carbonell, and Hannah Martin.

A number of writers, thinkers, theorists, and activists have enabled this book's approach, political engagement, and conceptualization, including Naomi Klein, Beth Povinelli, Christina Sharpe, Fred Moten, Achille Mbembe, Eduardo Viveiros de Castro, Keeanga-Yamahtta Taylor, Isabelle Stengers, Kyle Powys Whyte, Zoe Todd, Kathryn Yusoff, Nick Estes, Melanie Yazzie, and Marisol de la Cadena. I deeply appreciate the various worlds they have opened up. I also thank my comrades in DSA (Democratic Socialists of America) and particularly members of its Ecosocialist Working Group in Santa Cruz, who have helped me keep my theoretical discourse connected to on-the-ground struggles, sustained by solidarity and the collective practice of radical politics.

The book's chapters have been substantially revised from earlier publication, and much appreciation goes to all of the editors I have been fortunate to work with, and who contributed immeasurably to the improvement of my writing in all of its dimensions. Chapter 1, "Feeding the Ghost: John Akomfrah's Vertigo Sea," first appeared in John Akomfrah: Signs of Empire, ed. Thea Ballard with Dana Kopel (New Museum, 2018); chapter 2, "Blackout: The Necropolitics of Extraction," appeared in Dispatches 001 (October 1, 2018), edited by Gean Moreno; chapter 3, "The Visual Politics of Climate Refugees" was included in Photography and Migration, ed. Tanya Sheehan (New York: Routledge, 2018); chapter 4, "Gaming the Environment: On the Media Ecology of Public Studio" appeared in Public Studio, ed. Philip Monk (Toronto: Art Gallery of York University, 2019); chapter 5, "Animal Cosmopolitics: The Art of Gustafsson&Haapoja" was published in Center for Creative Ecologies journal, August 2016; chapter 6, "To Save a World: Geoengineering, Conflictual Futurisms, and the Unthinkable" was first written for in e-flux Journal 94 (October 2018); and chapter 7, "The Great Transition: The Arts and Radical System Change" appeared in e-flux Journal (April 2017).

At Duke University Press, I am deeply indebted to Ken Wissoker for his ongoing support as a visionary commissioning editor dedicated to politically engaged and urgent scholarship, and for the many discussions we have had over the years. Appreciation goes to Nina Foster for her assistance, to Susan Albury for project management, to Aimee Harrison for design, and to the anonymous readers for their incisive, ultimately helpful criticism. I thank UCSC's Arts Division for their support and the Center for Cultural Studies for its vibrant discussions. Finally, I express my heartfelt appreciation to family members—including Sandra Swanson, Kristin Demos, and Jim Demos—for their longstanding encouragement. My deepest gratitude—intellectually, politically, emotionally, and more—goes to my partner Joy Schendledecker, and to my daughters Zoë and Leila.
