

acknowledgments

Kenneth Harrow inspired this project with his invaluable advice that I consider the ecologies of African film as I worked on my first book. I am grateful to Ken for the advice, for feedback on early drafts, and for his dedication to my scholarship. While the seed of this book was sown in Michigan, it was in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, that I conceptualized its earliest version. I thank the College of Arts and Sciences and the Department of English at the University of Alabama for the gift of time and funding. Colleagues at UA offered feedback and other forms of assistance: thanks to Cassie Smith, Joel Brouwer, Lauren Cardon, Trudier Harris, James McNaughton, Albert Pionke, Utz McKnight, Lamar Wilson, David Deutsch, Heather White, Steve Tedeschi, Nicholas Kerr, and Tricia McElroy. My gratitude also goes to Jocelyn Hawley for being a terrific research assistant. Mark and Paige McCormick welcomed my family into theirs; I am grateful for their friendship.

Stephanie Newell helped me to visualize teaching at Yale and facilitated a smooth transition. I am grateful for the opportunity to work with her. I must acknowledge Lanny Hammer, David Kastan, and John Durham Peters for convincing me that a move to New Haven would be good for this book—it has been! I am lucky to call them colleagues and to be able to depend on their wise counsel. The imprint of John's groundbreaking work on media is all over this book. For welcoming me to Yale and for being dependable colleagues, I thank Jill Campbell, Jill Richards, Alanna Hickey, Joe Cleary, Tasha Eccles, Cathy Nicholson, Priyasha Mukhopadhyay, Joe North, Caryl (Caz) Phillips, R. John Williams, Sunny Xiang, Emily Thornbury, Michael Warner, Caleb Smith, Marta Figlerowicz, Ardis Butterfield, Ben Glaser, Jackie Goldsby, Margaret Homans, Jonathan Kramnick, Naomi Levine, and Ruth Yeazell. As department chair, Jessica Brantley has been a consistent supporter of my endeavors. She organized a manuscript workshop and approved funding for reproducing this book's images. Sarah Harford and Jamie Morris offered superb administrative support for the workshop.

The Faculty of Arts and Sciences funded the manuscript workshop through the Scholars as Learners initiative. I am grateful that I can continue to count on Tamar Gendler and Katie Lofton for support. The Whitney and Betty MacMillan Center for International and Area Studies, and the Frederick W. Hilles Publication Fund of Yale University offset the book's production costs. Outside my home department, Roderick Ferguson, Tavia Nyong'o, Lisa Lowe, Jill Jarvis, Laura Nasrallah, Paul North, Dan Magaziner, Ayesha Ramachandran, Jill Jarvis, and Paul Sabin have been remarkable interlocutors. I am indebted to them for their encouragement.

The manuscript workshop brought Byron Santangelo and Brian Larkin to New Haven, where they joined Michael Warner and Cecile Fromont for an afternoon of intense, productive conversation. I appreciate the quartet for reading the manuscript and for their incisive, constructive criticism. Jill Richards convened a writing support group that included Sunny Xiang, Jill Jarvis, and Marta Figlerowicz; I am grateful for their perceptive feedback on the introduction and epilogue. I am also indebted to Moradewun Adejunmobi, Connor Ryan, Nathan Suhr-Sytsma, Jeanne-Marie Jackson, Carlos Alonso Nugent, Evan Mwangi, and Stephen Rust for providing useful feedback. The manuscript also benefited from two anonymous reviewers appointed by Duke University Press; I am in awe of their ambition for this book, and the inability to rise to their challenge is my fault alone. Elizabeth Ault believed in this project from the initial pitch and maintained her positive energy throughout the process. I am grateful for her editorial care and stewardship of the African studies list at Duke University Press. I thank Benjamin Kossak and the production team for transforming the manuscript into a book.

For valuable feedback that enriched the manuscript, I thank the organizers and participants at invited lectures and symposia at Johns Hopkins University, Pennsylvania State University, the University of Wisconsin–Madison, Emory University, Rice University, New York University, the University of Oklahoma, the University at Buffalo, and the Chicago Architecture Biennial. I commend Yesomi Umolu for curating a terrific Chicago Biennial and inviting me to participate. Fabrice Monteiro, Pieter Hugo, Ed Kashi, Guy Tillim, and Olalekan Jeyifous gave me permission to reproduce their amazing images. I am thankful for the gift of their art. Federica Angelucci and Sinazo Chiya of the Stevenson Gallery in Cape Town facilitated the inclusion of Hugo's and Tillim's photographs. An excerpt from chapter 3 appeared in the Cambridge Journal of Postcolonial Literary Inquiry. I thank the editor and the press for the opportunity to use the work here.

I have been blessed with a remarkable network of mentors, friends, and co-travelers in the fields of African studies, postcolonial studies, and the environmental humanities. I am indebted to Jeanne-Marie Jackson, Connor Ryan, Jack Taylor, Anna Feuerstein, Paul Ugor, Bala Saho, Chima Korieh, Madhu Krishnan, Maureen Eke, Isidore Diala, Leonald Mbah, Bhakti Shringarpure, Chris Onyema, Joeken Nzerem, Jude Akudinobi, Niyi Afolabi, Evan Mwangi, Nathan Suhr-Sytsma, Yesomi Umolu, Chielozona Eze, Amatoritsero Ede, Abdulhamit Arvas, Byron Santangelo, and Duncan Yoon. Ato Quayson's scholarship and mentorship mean so much to me; I am grateful for his generosity and for the model he embodies.

Finally, I deeply appreciate my family, including my parents and brothers. Knowing how proud they are of my academic career keeps me going on difficult days. Nothing makes sense without my brilliant and beautiful wife Eve and our sons Kamsiyonna and Kenenna. I hope we can take pride in this book together. Kamsi, thank you for watching Black Panther with Dada. I thank the Famutimis for their love, and regret that Clara Famutimi did not live to see the outcome. I dedicate this book to her beautiful memory in appreciation of her selfless love and sacrifice.