One of the traditions of French Historical Studies is to produce a special issue each year focusing on a particular historiographical theme. The articles selected for those issues adhere, as much as submissions permit, to a wide chronological range. But there are times when we receive a number of submissions focusing on a particular chronological period. We thought that it would be a good idea to produce the occasional issue with such a cluster of chronologically connected articles. This issue, focusing primarily on the interwar years, is the first of its kind. Although the final article of this issue is about the Occupation, it signals the link between the interwar years and what came after, in much the same way as the first article leads from World War I to the interwar years. We welcome comments either addressed to the editors or else posted on H-France.
