

Contributors

STUART B. SCHWARTZ is the George Burton Adams Professor of history at Yale University and is currently coeditor of the HAHR. He is the author of Sovereignty and Society in Colonial Brazil: The High Court of Bahia and Its Judges, 1609–1751 (1973), Sugar Plantations in the Formation of Brazilian Society: Bahia, 1550–1835 (1985), and Slaves, Peasants, and Rebels: Reconsidering Brazilian Slavery (1988). He is also coeditor, with Frank Salomon, of South America, vol. 3 of The Cambridge History of the Native Peoples of the Americas (1999). He is presently working on a history of religious and cultural tolerance and dissidence in Iberia and colonial Latin America.

JOHN M. MONTEIRO received his Ph.D. in history from the University of Chicago and currently teaches anthropology at the Universidade Estadual de Campinas (UNICAMP), where he also serves as director of the doctoral program in the Social Sciences. He is the author of Negros da terra: Índios e bandeirantes nas origens de São Paulo (1994) and editor of Guia de fontes para a história indígena e do indigenismo em arquivos brasileiros (1994). He has published several articles on the history of indigenous populations in colonial and nineteenth-century Brazil, including a recent contribution to The Cambridge History of the Native Peoples of the Americas. At present, he is writing a book on Portuguese-Indian relations in a completely different context from his earlier work; this book focuses on South Asia in the sixteenth through eighteenth centuries.

NEIL L. WHITEHEAD is associate professor of anthropology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Currently, he is the editor of Ethnohistory. He is the author of Lords of the Tiger Spirit: A History of the Caribs in Colonial Venezuela and Guyana, 1498–1820 (1988). He is the editor of Wolves from the Sea: Readings in the Anthropology of the Native Caribbean (1995). He is also coeditor, with Peter Hulme, of Wild Majesty: Encounters with Caribs from Columbus to the Present Day: An Anthology (1992) and, with R. Brian Ferguson, of War in the Tribal Zone: Expanding States and Indigenous Warfare (1992). In 1997 he transcribed, annotated, and wrote the introduction to Sir Walter Raleigh's The Discoverie of the Large, Rich and Bewtiful Emphyre of Guiana. He has also published numerous articles on the ethnohistory and anthropology of Amazonian and Caribbean peoples, including chapters for volume 3 of The Cambridge History of the Native Peoples of the Americas, ed. Frank Salomon and Stuart B. Schwartz (1999), volume 2 of Cartography in the Traditional African, American, Arctic, Australian, and Pacific Societies, ed. David Woodward and G. Malcolm Lewis (1998), and volume 2 of General History of the Caribbean, ed. P. C. Emmer (1999).

TOM CONLEY is professor of Romance languages at Harvard University. He is the author of The Self-Made Map: Cartographic Writing in Early Modern France (1997), The Graphic Unconscious in Early Modern French Writing (1992), and Film Hieroglyphs: Ruptures in Classical Cinema (1991). He has translated works by Michel de Certeau, Gilles Deleuze, and Marc Augé.

JANAÍNA AMADO is professor of Brazilian history at the University of Brasília. She has written extensively about frontier experiences and messianic movements in Brazil. She is the author of Conflito social no Brasil: A revolta dos 'Mucker,' Rio Grande do Sul, 1868–1898 (1978), Frontier in Comparative Perspectives: The United States and Brazil (1990), and A formação do império português (1999). She is currently doing research on the early Portuguese empire, and finishing a book manuscript on Portuguese banishment to Brazil during the colonial period.

A. J. R. RUSSELL-WOOD received his Ph.D. from the University of Oxford, and has been on the faculty of The Johns Hopkins University since 1972. Whereas earlier researches focused exclusively on colonial Brazil, he then attempted to place Brazil in the broader context of the Portuguese seaborne empire, and more recently, has engaged in exercises in comparative colonialism. He is the author of The Portuguese Empire, 1415–1808: A World on the Move (1998) and The Black Man in Slavery and Freedom in Colonial Brazil (1982). His recent publications include Local Government in European Overseas Empires, 1450–1800 (1999), and Government and Governance of European Empires, 1450–1800 (2000), both of which he edited with lengthy introductions.

JORGE M. PEDEREIRA is professor of Sociology at the Universidade Nova and president of the Institute of Historical Sociology in Lisbon. He has published several essays on the industrial development of Portugal and the Portuguese empire during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. He is the author of Estrutura industrial e mercado colonial: Portugal e Brasil, 1780–1830 (1994). He has recently completed a book manuscript on the merchant community in eighteenth-century Lisbon.

JOSÉ JOBSON DE ANDRADE ARRUDA is professor of modern history at the Universidade de São Paulo and the Instituto de Economia da UNICAMP. He has published extensively. His major publications include O Brasil no comércio colonial (1980) and A grande revolução inglesa, 1640–1780 (1996). His publications also include chapters in edited volumes, such as História da expansão portuguesa, ed. Joel Serrão and Antônio de Oliveira Marques (1989) and The Political Economy Merchant Empires, ed. James D. Tracy (1991). His most recent publications, A historiografia luso-brasileira contemporânea, coauthored with José Tengarrinha (1998), and vol. 3 of Documentos manuscritos avulsos da Capitania de São Paulo (2000), reflect his current interests in Luso-Brazilian historiography and his efforts to compile and publish key documents for the study of Brazilian history.

JEFFREY C. MOSHER is assistant professor at Texas Tech University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Florida in 1996. He is currently working on a book that explores the impact of local power struggles on the development of national political institutions and practices in nineteenth-century Brazil.

HERBERT S. KLEIN is professor of Latin American history at Columbia University. He is the author of four comparative studies of slavery, the most recent of which are The Atlantic Slave Trade (1999) and African Slavery in Latin America and the Caribbean (1986). In addition, he wrote three books on Bolivian history, including Haciendas and Ayllus: Rural Society in the Bolivian Andes in the 18th and 19th Centuries (1993) and Bolivia: The Evolution of a Multiethnic Society (1992). His long-term interest in colonial fiscal history is reflected in his book entitled The American Finances of the Spanish Empire, 1680–1809 (1998). His current research interests are in comparative economic and social history, and he is now working on the history of eighteen- and nineteenth-century Brazilian rural society, nineteenth-century urban Mexico, and U.S. demographic history and comparative international migrations.

FRANCISCO VIDAL LUNA is professor emeritus of economic history at the University of São Paulo. He is the author of Minas Gerais: Escravos e senhores (1981); and coauthor, with Iraci Del Nero da Costa, of Minas colonial: Economia e sociedade (1982). He has published several articles on the economy and population of the province of São Paulo, including "São Paulo: População, atividades e posse de escravos em vinte e cinco localidades, 1777–1829," Estudos Econômicos 28, no. 1 (1998); "Características demográficas dos escravos de São Paulo, 1777–1829," Estudos Econômicos 22, no. 3 (1993); and, with Herbert S. Klein, "Slaves and Masters in Early-Nineteenth-Century Brazil: São Paulo," Journal of Interdisciplinary History 21, no. 4 (1991). He is currently working on topics in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Brazilian history, with a focus on the province of São Paulo.

DAURIL ALDEN is the author of Charles R. Boxer: Soldier, Historian, Teacher, Collector, Traveler (2000). He is currently writing the second volume of a trilogy concerning the Jesuits and their assets in the Portuguese world. The book, to be published by Harvard University Press, will be entitled The Destruction of an Enterprise: The Suppression of the Society of Jesus in the Portuguese World and Beyond, 1750–1777.