Aims and Scope

The Annals of Occupational Hygiene was established as an international journal to promote all aspects of occupational and environmental hygiene and health. It is aimed at all who are interested in the effects of work on health.

It publishes high quality research papers, rapid communications and reviews. These are of broad interest and cover such areas as:

— chemical, physical and biological agents;
— mechanisms of formation, emission, exposure and absorption;
— sampling and analysis;
— control and protection;
— occupational toxicology;
— effects, including dose-responses;
— health risk assessments;
— hygiene standards and compliance;
— education and training.

Editorials, Letters to the Editor and Book Reviews are also included.
