CONTRIBUTORS

MICHELE DILLON is professor and chair of the Department of Sociology at the University of New Hampshire.

ANN SWIDLER is a professor of sociology at the University of California, Berkeley. She is best known for her work on American culture and institutions, including the co-authored Habits of the Heart, The Good Society, and Inequality by Design, and her most recent book, Talk of Love: How Culture Matters. Her current research explores cultural and institutional responses to the AIDS epidemic in sub-Saharan Africa.

GRACE YUKICH is a PhD candidate in the Department of Sociology at New York University whose interests lie at the intersection of religion and politics. She is currently completing her dissertation on the New Sanctuary Movement, an interfaith movement of religious communities working for the rights of undocumented immigrants in the United States.

MARGARITA A. MOONEY is an assistant professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and a faculty fellow at the Carolina Population Center. Her book, Faith Makes Us Live: Surviving and Thriving in the Haitian Diaspora, was published by the University of California Press in 2009 (see www.faithmakesuslive.com). In addition to several other articles on Haitian immigrants and religion, Mooney has co-authored a book on minority achievement in higher education called Taming the River: Negotiating the Academic, Financial, and Social Currents at Selective Colleges and Universities (Princeton University Press, 2009) and two articles on Latinos in higher education. See www.margaritamooney.com for links to her publications.

ROBERT SEAN MACKIN is an assistant professor of sociology at Texas A&M University. He received his PhD from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in 2005. Past research has focused on the so-called “Red Bishop” of Cuernavaca, Mexico. He is currently working on a book manuscript on the progressive Catholic Church in Mexico in comparative perspective. Future research plans will explore the impact Ivan Illich’s training centers had on the papal volunteers who served in Latin America in the 1960s.
