Recurrent carcinoid involvement of a tricuspid bioprosthesis

Jan Willem van Rijswijka,b, Aryan Vinkc, Lex A. van Herwerden and Jolanda Kluinb,*

* Department of Pathology, University Medical Center Utrecht, Utrecht, Netherlands
b Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, Academic Medical Center, Amsterdam, Netherlands
c Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, University Medical Center Utrecht, Utrecht, Netherlands

* Corresponding author. Department of Cardiothoracic Surgery, Academic Medical Center, PO Box 22660, 1100 DD Amsterdam, Netherlands. Tel: +31 20 566 0219; e-mail: j.kluin@amc.uva.nl (J. Kluin).

Received 9 September 2016; received in revised form 29 November 2016; accepted 6 December 2016

Keywords: Carcinoid heart disease · Tricuspid valve · Bioprosthesis

Figure 1: (A and B) Bioprosthesis 18 months post-implantation, with a layer of white connective tissue at the ventricular surface. Bar = 1 cm. (C) Microscopic examination showing the compact acellular connective tissue of the bioprosthesis (bottom) covered with a layer of loose connective tissue with fibroblasts (top). Haematoxylin and eosin. Bar = 500 μm. (D) Higher magnification of C. Bar = 100 μm.