

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank everybody who has supported me intellectually, spiritually, and creatively, during my time writing this book. I hope that this book gives back to the world a fraction of the joy, energy, support, and care that you have given to me this past year.

First, I would like to thank my father, who taught me what it means to be Black; my mother, who has always reminded me of the joys of creativity; and my sister, with whom I share the same complexity of identity and childhood experience. I dedicate this book to my family—mixed and beautiful—for encouraging me to explore the intersection of play and race. I love and understand you all more than you will ever know.

I could not have written this book without the support of my scholarly community either. Thank you to Kristine Jørgensen, Riccardo Fassone, Tom Apperley, and Kishonna Gray for reviewing and offering superlative feedback on the essay that this book developed out of, “Torture, Play, and the Black Experience”; your insights helped shape the book you hold before you today. Additionally, thank you Mia Consalvo, Geoffrey Long, Jesper Juul, and William Uricchio for reviewing the preliminary manuscript with such a generous eye to detail. Shira Chess, Souvik Mukherjee, Soraya Murray, Chris Paul, Nick Taylor, Adrienne Shaw, Sara Stang, Peter McDonald, Steven Dashiell, Alenda Chang, Thiago Falcao, Alexander Carneiro, Eddo Sterne, John Sharp, Sam Tobin, James Hodges, Robby Ratan, Cynthia Wang, and Lindsay Grace, thank you for all of the amazing conversations, encouragement, and support. I appreciate also the work of this book's anonymous reviewers, as well as the tireless effort that the MIT Press's Noah Springer and Lillian Dunaj have put into supporting the book through the publishing process. From the bottom of my heart, thank you.

The previous list only scratches the surface. I couldn't have written this without the support of my community here at the University of California Irvine (UCI). Roderic Crooks, Bo Ruberg, Katie Salen-Tekinbaş, and Braxton Soderman, I cannot tell you how invaluable your feedback on this project has been. Support cannot be limited to feedback, and so I also must thank my excellent colleagues Sameer Singh, Tess Tanenbaum, Karen Tanenbaum, Daniel Epstein, Elena Agapie, David Redmiles, Paul Dourish, Melissa Mazmanian, and Kylie Pepler for helping to provide a healthy community where I could thrive while completing this work. This extends also to the present and past graduate student community at UCI as well: Amanda Cullen, Forest Scully-Blaker, Ke Jing, Ian Larson, Kat Brewster, William Dunkel, Spencer Ruelos, Justin Kever, Izzy Williams, Bryan Truitt, Brandon Blackburn, Adrianna Burton, Dan Gardner, Emory Edwards, Kate Ringland, Bono Olgado, and Nikki Crenshaw, your encouragement and support has meant more to me than you will ever know.

I am also indebted to the intellectual support from the Analog Game Studies and Sounding Out! publishing communities. Evan Torner, Shelly Jones, Megan Condis, Liana Silva and Edmond Chang thank you for being such amazing and supportive colleagues. Jenny Stover, thank you for always believing in me. The material in this book goes all the way back to your Popular Music and Representation class—I hope I have treated it with a fraction of the integrity that you have in your research, teaching, and everyday practice. Likewise, I am indebted to the band Bad Brains, who let me reprint the excellent lyrics to “Pay to Cum” free of charge. You are the real deal. Thank you!

Paul Greenleaf and Lizzie Stark, you have my heart and gratitude for reading and reviewing an early version of this manuscript. Thank you for caring for and cultivating my tender and tentative early writing. Of course, I owe Andrew Schrock a word of thanks too. Your support and engagement with my writing have made all the difference, and I could not have done this without you.
