find a robust independent influence of education on ADRD risk, early life family environments had little impact on the relationship. Adolescent cognition, however, which we show is influenced by family environments, does partly explain why educational attainment influences later life ADRD risk, though both adolescent IQ and education independently influence the risk for and resilience against dementia.