In older adults with T2D, self-monitoring might improve glycemic control. Self-monitoring and SPPB were related to several urine metabolites, but the underlying mechanisms is unclear in this study with small sample size. Future research with sufficient power is needed to investigate the underlying mechanisms of self-monitoring and lifestyle behaviors on these metabolites, and how these metabolites might be applied to improve physical function in older adults with T2D.