

Welcome

David W. Piston

President, Biophysical Society

On behalf of the Biophysical Society, I am pleased to welcome you to the inaugural issue of our new educational journal, The Biophysicist. Over the years of discussion and planning that led to this new journal, there were many questions about just what the scope of articles would be. Here we find the first installment of that answer, but by no means the last. As our Editor-in-Chief, Sam Safran, describes in his introductory editorial, the eventual scope of the journal will be built around information that the community of biophysicists provides and finds useful. This first issue hints at the path forward, but how this path evolves is up to all of us.

The first step on a long journey is always exciting, and we are looking forward to continuing this journey together.
